Idle Total In U. S. Rises 200,000 to 4,700,000

Over 5 Million Expected in June Despite 'Moderate' Business Optimism

By Sam Stavisky
Post Reporter

Unemployment rose to 4,700,000 in February and will probably rise well over the five million mark in June, according to the employment analysis experts of the Department of Labor.

This gloomy situation for job hunters is in prospect despite the "moderately optimistic" outlook for business for the first half of this year, according to Robert C. Goodwin, director of the Bureau of Employment Security.

In February, unemployment in the Nation grew by 200,000 to 4,700,000, chiefly as a result of new would-be-workers entering the labor market. These job candidates are principally school and college graduates, and students who've quit school for work.

The main influx of new job seekers will come in June, when 1,200,000 graduates of college, high schools, and trade schools are due to invade the labor market. A large number of these will be absorbed by business, industry, and the farms.

However, under the present rate of expansion of business and industry—according to Goodwin—it will be impossible to absorb all the new job candidates. The net result will be another rise in unemployment.

In the meantime, as unemployment rises, so will employment. The employment security chief foresees 59 million Americans at work by July. Goodwin disclosed that not merely Government analysts, but employers themselves, have a "moderately optimistic" outlook for business.

For the next several months there will be considerable improvement of employment opportunities not alone due to seasonal factors.

The Nation-wide reporting system of the United States Employment Service, which surveys the outlook of employers for the forthcoming three months, also indicates a general expectancy of better business.

Things Looking Up Now

Things are looking up right now for business. The latest Bureau of Labor Statistics survey shows a 19,000 increase in manufacturing jobs in February. This increase would have been closer to 100,000 except for the auto strike. Last year in February manufacturing industries reported a drop of 133,000 jobs.

Yet, even with the uptrend in unemployment, there are two million more jobless today than there were at this time in 1948 and 1947, according to Labor's Monthly Survey, the research publication of the American Federation of Labor, released yesterday.

The AFL pointed out that the number of industrial areas reporting 12 percent or more of their labor force out of work has risen from 39 in December to 43 in January. More than half of 163

Escaped Elephant Rolls on Keeper, Terrorizes Town

Pomona, Calif., March 25 (AP).—Two elephants frightened by a train whistle broke away from their circus keepers last night, ran amok for an hour and a half and critically injured an attendant who tried to load them back on their train.

Leroy Spellman, 29, was hurt seriously when a 4-ton female elephant picked him up in her trunk, threw him to the ground and rolled on him.

The elephants set out on a rampage that caused uncounted damage.

Frightened residents deluged police with stories of monsters roaming through backyards and crashing through fences. One elephant wandered into a factory

Import Levy On Potatoes May Drop 50%

Trade Pact Clause Raises Duty Paradox On Surplus Product

By John W. Ball
Post Reporter

The tariff on imports of millions of bushels of Canadian potatoes may automatically drop 50 percent this year, the State Department revealed yesterday.

The disclosure came in a routine release by the State Department that it is seeking changes in the reciprocal trade agreements affecting potatoes with 26 foreign countries.

The announcement was particularly startling, because Congress recently has heard daily demands by members from potato-growing States for strict reductions in present imports.

The present tariff rate of 75 cents a sack (100 pounds) will drop to 37½ cents on tremendously increased imports, State revealed, unless one of the following two developments take place:

1. American growers produce at least 15 million bushels more than the goal of 335 million bushels set for this year by the Department of Agriculture; or

2. Canada and the other 25 foreign countries agree to a remedial change in the present reciprocal trade agreement.

Potato Paradox

The amazing paradox of lower duties on a commodity that already is in such surplus that it is costing the Government 100 million dollars this year to support its price comes about as follows:

The present agreement provides that if this country produces less than 350 million bushels a year, any foreign country can send in sufficient spuds to make up the difference at half the regular tariff of 75 cents a sack.

Because of reduced consumption of potatoes the Agriculture Department this year asked growers to hold down plantings to assure a crop of not more than 335 million bushels. If this goal is accomplished, Canada thus can send in 15 million bushels at half rate.

If, however, growers produce 350 million bushels or more, Canada will have to pay present duties of 75 cents a sack for all over 2½

Rare Sensitivity

Student Felled by Cold Pills Is Allergic to Antihistamines

A rare condition of "individual sensitivity"—not an overdose of the new cold-cure pills—was blamed yesterday in the near-death of a Maryland University student.

Dr. Harry A. Bishop, director of the school's student health services, disclosed that he and school and Federal investigators are reasonably certain the near-tragedy occurred because of the student's unknown allergy.

The chances of such conditions are too rare to be medically calculated, but might well be one in millions, a high Food and Drug Administration official said.

"Things like this happen so rarely that it may be five years or more before another (similar case) occurs in the whole country," said the official, Dr. Arnold J. Lehman of Falls Church, Va., chief of FDA's division on pharmacology.

He pointed out that literally millions of the pills have been sold without prescription, and that the Maryland incidence was the first of its kind to be reported.

The victim was identified as Herbert Bernard Mutter, 19, freshman in business administration, of 4107 Fairview ave., Baltimore, Md.

His brush with death after taking some prescription-free antihistamine pills to stop a cold was made public Friday in a "Warning to Students" memorandum by Dr. Bishop.

"If you must take these drugs, follow scrupulously the directions

Judge Takes Gravy From Roast Man Steals From Kin

James Lewis stole a roast and yesterday Municipal Judge Armond Scott put him on the pan before sending him to the cooler for 30 days.

"That was pretty mean stealing," Scott told Lewis.

The roast, 7½ pounds of solid fare, adorned the dining table of Lewis' stepfather, James R. Woodson, 1212 Third st. nw., last Thursday when Lewis came to visit his mother.

The roast caught Lewis' eye as he was leaving and Lewis caught the roast around the middle at about the same time, applied a headlock and fled with it secured under his arm.

D. C. Fast Time Polling Plan Hits Snag

Barrett Says Police Need Two Months to Make Sound Canvass

Perhaps the Commissioners should have held a public hearing on daylight saving time after all. Their plan to take a vote on the District issue is getting complicated.

Superintendent of Police Robert J. Barrett said yesterday it would take his men two months to conduct a house-to-house poll of the city. Daylight saving time goes into effect across the country April 30.

This possible method of conducting the referendum was suggested Friday by Commissioner John Russell Young as perhaps preferable to leaving ballots at station houses where persons could presumably vote as often as they wished.

Barrett said Young had not yet mentioned the proposal to him. Young was not available yesterday for comment.

Young had said Friday that he wanted to discuss the proposal with Engineer Commissioner Gordon R. Young. Whether or not the Commissioners would try to get a city-wide vote with the help of police has not been decided. They initially planned to print 100,000 ballots.

Prince Georges County Has Chance to Rejuvenate Itself

By Dorothea Andrews
Post Reporter

(First of a Series)

Budget time is coming up in Prince Georges County, and the county's five commissioners are getting ready for their biggest job of the year.

Between now and April 15 they must set the tax rate and decide which of the county's many needs is going to be met by tax funds during 1951. A public hearing on the budget is scheduled for April 12.

It is a lead pipe cinch that all of Prince Georges County's problems can't be solved by next year's budget—or the one after that, either.

For Prince Georges County is deep in a financial, political and governmental morass created by a flood of new people, entrenchment of the Democratic party in power and a century-old governing pattern.

The county will be in better position to extricate itself from one area of the morass on July 1 when the Sothoron Act authorizing reorganization of Prince Georges government goes into effect. Governor W. Preston Lane, jr., plans to sign it into law Tuesday.

Under terms of that law, the county commissioners can streamline their own functions, put more modern departmental structures into operation and expand some county activities without specific permissions from the Maryland General Assembly.

But the biggest problem they must face is the population. Since 1930, when 60,095 were Prince Georges residents, the population has tripled. Best estimates of the number of persons the 1950 census will show range around 180,000.

If this is true, Prince Georges will have outstripped its neighbor, Montgomery County, which is expected to show a population of about 140,000 this year.

Prince Georges County had a higher basic county tax rate for 1949—$1.97 per $100 valuation, compared with $1.90 in Montgomery. And last week, the commissioners announced that the county's assessable base had jumped about $25,000,000—from $195,109,620 to $220,223,620. This will mean, it is estimated, that the county can pick up about a half-million dollars in tax money this year

Bang-Up Time for Bing

40,000 Visitors to Give Crosby Front Royal Welcome on 'Day'

Front Royal, Va., March 25.—One of the biggest events in the history of this small community will take place Saturday, April 1, when "Bing Crosby Day" will be celebrated with all the pomp and ceremony townspeople can muster.

Some 30,000 to 40,000 visitors are expected to crowd the town, which has about 8500 population, not only to see the famed crooner, but to participate in the elaborate program arranged.

Crosby, too, will be quite a busy man. He'll participate in a mammoth parade that morning, dedicate the town's Bing Crosby Stadium, for which he donated the first $1000, make personal appearances at a band concert and field events, attend the world premiere of his new picture, "Riding High," and make appearance at a barn dance and a square dance.

All the day's events will be dedicated to Bing. They will begin at 11 a. m. and end at midnight.

The people of Front Royal and Warren County have worked hard for weeks to make the day "colossal." In addition, the No. 1 Gary Crosby Fan Club of America, formed here by teen-agers of the county, will do their bit by making all purchasers of barn dance tickets members of the club.

As a further event, the Skyline Caverns will hold "open house."

The "day" came into being as a result of Crosby's visit to Front Royal two years ago. At that time the Front Royal Chamber of Commerce and the Warren-Front Royal

Truman Asks Congress For Full ECA Amount As 'Blow for Peace'

To Chart U. S. Cold War Steps

'Unpartisan' Post-ECA Group Urged by Senator Vandenberg

NYHT News Service

Sen. Arthur H. Vandenberg (R., Mich.) in an eloquent new appeal for an "unpartisan" foreign policy, proposed yesterday establishment of a nonpartisan commission to examine America's role in world affairs and recommended steps toward a "dependable peace."

The Michigan Republican, ranking minority member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee but inactive because of illness during most of the current session of Congress, made his proposal in a letter to Paul G. Hoffman, Economic Cooperation Administrator.

The letter, congratulating Hoffman on his two years as head of the ECA, was the first major foreign policy statement made by Senator Vandenberg in months, and among its salient points were these:

1. Despite the "tremendous" success of the European Recovery Program, western Europe, including western Germany, have not progressed sufficiently toward economic integration. He said: "There must be sharp improvement in these trends."

2. There are "increasingly obvious limitations upon the domestic resources which we can 'safely and wisely' commit to over-all foreign aid."

3. These resources "can no longer ignore or minimize the impact of Communist aggression in the Far East."

4. The western world is now "engaged in a struggle that is epochal in nature and global in design" and the western nations must continue "to work together in closest, practical harmony for the effectual defense of their mutual heritage."

The crux of Senator Vandenberg's letter, which he typed at his home here, was his proposal for creation of a new "Harriman Committee."

The Harriman Committee, officially the President's committee on foreign aid, was a 19-member nonpartisan group appointed by President Truman on June 22, 1947, to consider the limits within which the United States could safely and wisely extend foreign aid and to examine the relation between this assistance and the American economy.

The committee was headed by W. Averell Harriman, then secretary of commerce and now United

Proposed Reduction Might Lead Way To Third World War, Says Letter to Kee

Key West, Fla., March 25 (AP). — President Truman warned the congressional economic bloc today that sharp cuts in foreign spending might precipitate a third world war.

Demanding House passage of the "full amount" of Administration requests for $3,375,000,000 to carry the program forward another year, he said the United States had to fight World War II because it turned its back on the "rest of the world."

"We will save nothing if we ignore the needs of other nations now only to find that the result is World War III," he declared.

Approval of Administration requests, he said, would strike a "major blow" for peace.

Sends Letter to Kee

Countering efforts of the economy bloc to trim at least a half billion dollars from the omnibus measure, the President warned that the "full amount" is necessary to fight the "poverty, misery and insecurity" on which "communism thrives."

Mr. Truman pitched into the House debate with a two-page letter to Chairman John Kee (D., West Va.), of the Foreign Affairs Committee.

"Passage of this Act will strengthen all nations threatened with intimidation, subversion or aggression," he said.

"The program called for by this act is the minimum consistent with the interest of the United States and our efforts to achieve a peaceful world. Failure to enact it in its full amount would do irreparable damage.

He called the single-package foreign aid program for Europe, Asia and other areas "the keystone of our protection against the destruction of another war and against the terrible weapons of this atomic age."

"Our armed forces can afford us a measure of defense, but real security for our Nation and all the rest of mankind can come only from building the kind of world where men can live together in peace," he said.

He asked "rapid and favorable action" to give "renewed hope and vigor" to people everywhere trying to achieve economic independence and political freedom.

"The Foreign Assistance Act," he said, "will authorize continued economic aid to the Marshall Plan countries in Europe and to the Republic of Korea to enable them, through their own efforts, to establish self-supporting economies."

And, he added:

"It will authorize aid where needed to those free countries in the general area of China whose survival is threatened by the imminent danger of Communist infiltration."

Hanson Says McCarthy 'Slurs' Set Off 'Hate' Whisper Chain

By Alfred Friendly
Post Reporter

A story, in human terms, of what has happened in community antagonism, attempted persecution and "humiliating incidents" to one of the persons charged by Senator McCarthy (R., Wis.) with Communist leanings was made public yesterday.

Senator Tydings (D., Md.) chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations subcommittee investigating McCarthy's charges, released a letter from Haldore Hanson, State Department employe who figured in one of McCarthy's public cases.

In his letter, Hanson begged Tydings for an opportunity to appear before the subcommittee to answer the charges. His request was granted and he will take the witness stand Tuesday.

Referred to as 'Spy'

Hanson said some neighbors, near a farm he owns in Loudoun County, Va., have begun referring to him as "a Communist" and a "Russian spy," and that a petition was begun calling his family undesirable and urging their expulsion from the community.

Hanson, a 38-year-old State Department official, was accused by McCarthy two weeks ago of having "pro-Communist proclivities" and of being "a man with a mission to communize the world."

As evidence, McCarthy read passages of a book Hanson wrote about 1939, describing his experiences as a reporter for the Associated Press.

Stores Announce 30% Price Cuts In East Germany

Berlin, March 25 (AP).—East Germany's state-owned chain stores today announced a 30-percent price reduction for consumer goods effective Monday.

This is the third price cut since the Soviets introduced their own system of government-controlled ration-free chain stores in eastern Germany in 1948.

The cut may attract many West Berliners who have west marks to exchange at a rate of one to eight east marks. The east mark rate, which slumped to an all time low of 8.50-9 to one west mark last week, is expected by bankers to average on an 8-to-1 basis for some time to come.

Garrison State Held Price of Atom Security

Mobilization Chief Tells Congress Cost Would Be $300 Billion

By The Associated Press

Congress was told yesterday that if the United States tried to achieve absolute security against atomic attack it would have to spend more than 300 billion dollars and become a "garrison state."

This analysis of civilian defense against A-bombs was given the Senate-House Atomic Committee by Paul J. Larsen, director of the Office of Civilian Mobilization in the National Security Resources Board.

Larsen said in testimony given in closed session March 23 and made public by the committee yesterday that perfect security against atomic attack "obviously is not possible."

"Nor is an attempt to achieve absolute security desirable under present conditions unless we are willing to become a garrison state," he said.

He said that, looking at the problem from a security standpoint alone, the solution might appear to be compulsory dispersion of people and of industry, but he added:

"The dollars and cents cost of decentralizing some 200 cities in the United States having populations of 50,000 or more would probably be in the neighborhood of 300 billion dollars.

"The social and political costs of such decentralization might put an end to democracy as we know it. To accomplish such a program of compulsory dispersion we would have to be willing to become a garrison state."

He added that "if too much of our national effort is expended for

U. N. Veto Was Devised by U. S., Foreign Policy Review Shows

By Ferdinand Kuhn
Post Reporter

The State Department published a new batch of wartime documents yesterday showing, among other things, that the Great Power veto in the United Nations was of American, and not Soviet, origin.

The documents form part of a 725-page book entitled "Postwar Foreign Policy Preparation," written by Prof. Harley A. Notter of the Bureau of United Nations Affairs. The book is an elaborate record, compiled at President Truman's request over the last four years, of what the State Department was doing in the war years to plan for peace.

It contains documentary proof that almost two years before the signing of the Charter, months before the start of consultations with the Russians, even before the first official soundings of congressional leaders, State Department planners had agreed on the right of veto for the Great Powers.

There is little evidence in the book that they foresaw the postwar split between Russia and the West. Their hopes and plans were based on continuing cooperation with the Russians.

Judging from these selected documents, Germany was the main field in which the wartime planners at the State Department foresaw possible trouble with the

Monday Conference On Perversion Set

Cvetic Tells How He Lost File on Reds

By the United Press

An absent-minded undercover agent told the House Un-American Activities Committee yesterday that he mislaid an important batch of papers allegedly linking some Congressmen to a Communist-front organization.

Former FBI undercover man Matthew Cvetic confessed ruefully that he left the papers on a chair in the committee room a few weeks ago. When he looked again, he said, they were gone.

Red-faced committee members eyed each other uneasily as the story of the missing papers unfolded, particularly when it was brought out that Cvetic, his lawyer, and committee personnel were the only persons in the room when the documents disappeared.

Cvetic's admission gave a new twist to a novel investigation which the committee started Friday when he testified that the papers had vanished mysteriously. He offered no explanation at the time, and Chairman John S. Wood (D., Ga.) ordered his staff to find out what had happened to the evidence.

Cvetic did not say what jogged his memory overnight. He said he is still looking for the papers and his attorney, Harry A. Sherman of Pittsburgh, told the committee he might be able to get some photographic copies if they can't find the originals.

House Crime Probers Weigh Next Move

The House subcommittee investigating Washington crime and law enforcement will have a closed meeting early this week to consider its future program, Chairman James G. Davis (D., Ga.) said last night.

The inquiry has been in recess since March 4 when the subcommittee concluded stormy hearings into Major Robert J. Barrett's transfer of Capt. Anthony J. Richitt from the Third to the Eighth Precinct for "disciplinary reasons" last month.

Davis said he does not know which phase of local crime and enforcement will receive the committee spotlight when hearings resume.

But the chairman made clear his first concern is getting more funds to finance the inquiry. He said all but $600 of the $10,000 originally voted for the probe has been expended.

A resolution is now before a House Administration Subcommittee asking an additional $40,000 to conduct a full-scale investigation of gambling here. He made a preliminary appeal for the funds in a hearing March 7, and said he soon will go before the subcommittee again.

Hyman I. Fischbach, crime committee counsel, is due here Monday from a brief Florida vacation, Davis said.

Rayburn eDnounces 'Red' Tags Hung on Innocent

Asheville, N. C., March 25 (AP).—Speaker Sam Rayburn of the United States House of Representatives tonight denounced the practice of pinning Communist labels on innocent persons.

In an obvious reference to Senator McCarthy (R., Wisc.), Rayburn declared that "it is unfair for a man in a responsible position to make irresponsible statements."

Rayburn admitted the possibility that some "radicals" may work in Government departments but said he believed the Federal loyalty board can hanadle the situation.

By Thomas Winship
Post Reporter

The Senate Appropriationes subcommittee, headed by Senator Lister Hill (D., Ala.) will meet Monday at 2:30 p. m. in another attempt to decide if and how Washington police can help eliminate alleged sex perverts from key Government jobs.

The Senate group, it was learned last night, also will go into whether any dope addicts are on Federal payrolls on the theory they, too, are susceptible to blackmailing tactics by subversive agents seeking restricted information.

The ultra-secret inquiry, started Thursday at request of Senator Kenneth S. Wherry (Nebr.), Senate Republican floor leader, is focusing its attention on these points informed sources said last night:

1. To what extent are local police informing Government agencies of arrests of sex and narcotics offenders who are Federal employes.

To Consider Legislation

2. Whether new legislation should be recommended requiring Washington police to give this information to Government personnel and security people.

3. Whether more policemen should be provided to step up the crackdown on sexual perversion and establish closer liaison with Federal agencies.

It is understood these questions were put to Police Lieut. Roy E. Blick, vice squad chief, and Sergt. James K. Hunter, acting head of the special investigations squad which handles subversive activities, when they were subpenaed before the Senate subcommittee.

The police officials told the Senators they have not regularly reported the arrest of a person on immoral charges directly to the Government agency for whom the offender works.

No Blanket Authority

Lieut. Blick explained yesterday the Police Department does not have blanket authority to pass along this information "to Government agencies any more than we do to any other employer" unless the offender directs it.

It was learned, however, that police have for the past five years forwarded to the FBI photographs and finger prints of all persons arrested for "disorderly conduct—sexual perversion or homosexuality."

The FBI, in turn, notifies the Government agency where the offender is employed, it was said.

Senator Homer Ferguson (R., Mich.), a subcommittee member, refused to comment on the inquiry yesterday but said difficulty in dismissing sex perverts from the State Department was one reason why the so-called McCarran rider was tacked to its appropriations bill two years ago.

Dismissal Authorized

That proviso authorizes dismissal of personnel without regard to Civil Service regulations.

Ferguson said former Secretary of State James F. Byrnes had emphasized to him the difficulty of ridding his department of sex perverts and other because he had no discretionary powers of his own.

With the McCarran rider on the books, some subcommittee members presumably now want to know whether the State Department is conducting the most vigorous possible housecleaning of what they term "poor security risks."

Under Ferguson's questioning before another Senate Appropriations Subcommittee on March 1, Undersecretary of State John E. Peurifoy said that since January 1, 1947 91 State employes were asked to resign for moral reasons, most of them homo-sexuals.

Ferguson has announced he wants to know how many of these 91 dismissed persons have landed jobs in other Government departments.

Though reported elsewhere, police officials have not given the Senate group a list of known sex offenders, nor does the committee have any indication it will receive such a document, it also was learned last night.

Maj. Robert J. Barrett, superintendent of police told reporters he has no knowledge of such a list being turned over to the Senators.

The subcommittee is charged with considering the District budget, including police funds.

It was not clear whether Blick and Hunter or any other officials will be called to the meeting Monday.

Pope to Lead Prayers Today For Persecuted Churchmen

Vatican City, March 25 (AP).—Pope Pius XII will lead Roman Catholics throughout the world in prayer Sunday for Josef Cardinal Mindszenty and other persecuted churchmen—most of them in Communist-dominated lands.

L'Osservatore Romano, the Vatican newspaper, said the Pope may deliver a pastoral address when he goes into St. Peter's Basilica to lead the crusade of prayer.

The ceremony will be broadcast by the Vatican radio at 10:50 a.m. (Eastern Standard Time) on the short waves of 31.10 meters, 41.27, 50.26 and the medium wave of 202.

The Pope called in an encyclical two weeks ago to all Catholic bishops for a Passion Sunday crusade of prayer for a new order of "truth, justice and charity" and laymen, or "the opportune remedies for he present evils."

He listed among these evils the rmaments race, which he said leaves "the souls of all fearful and suspended," the fact that "frequently truth is replaced by lies" and the persecution of the church.

Thouugh he did not mention communism or Russia by name, he deplored that "in not a few countries the rights of God, the church and even of human nature are offended and downtrodden."

Sunday's prayers will be not only for Cardinal Mindszenty, imprisoned for life in Hungary, Archbishop Alojzije Stepinac, imprisoned in Yugoslavia, and other prelates who have been jailed and impeded in their ministries, but also for many obscure priests and laymen.

New Blast-Acheson Attacks Scheduled by GOP Senators

By The Associated Press

A number of Senate Republicans plan to "go after" Secretary of State Acheson in a new series of attacks.

Senator Bridges (R., N. H.) said yesterday that "a whole group of Republicans" will be at work on the blast-Acheson project for the next few weeks—"and the parade will start next week."

The New Hampshire Republican is expected to lead off with a Senate speech attacking the man whose department and Far East policies have come under increasing GOP fire.

The move was disclosed as a showdown, appeared near in the hunt for Communists and spies in the State Department set off by Senator McCarthy (R., Wis.).

Prize Case Not Identified

McCarthy's prize case—his charge that Russia's main spy in this country is connected with the State Department—was before the Senate investigating committee together with confidential FBI data about the man, whose identity has not been made public.

Exactly what the data shows was not announced. Whether it supports McCarthy's charge may be known Monday when FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover appears before the committee at a public hearing, accompanied by Attorney General J. Howard McGrath.

The Washington Post said the FBI files do not back up McCarthy's accusation against the individual—nor come close to it. Some Democratic Senators privately expressed the same view.

McCarthy was said to feel that the kind of analysis given four members of the committee by the FBI is not adequate. He has contended that proof of his case is in the FBI files.

No Counter Planned

Administration leaders in the Senate apparently had made no plans yet to counter the new Republican campaign against Acheson. McCarthy and Senator Wherry (R., Neb.) led off last week with assertions that the Secretary should be dropped.

Senator Knowland (R., Calif.) said members of a Senate Appropriations subcommittee will demand an explanation Monday from the State Department on what is being done to keep the British from turning over 75 transport planes to the Chinese Communists.

The Republican fire comes at a time when Acheson is trying to enlist congressional support for a new Far East policy.

Acheson and Ambassador Philip Jessup—who recently visited the Orient—are due to discuss the Far East situation Wednesday with the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. And the State Department has started a series of informal meetings with lawmakers to explain the Administration's aims in the China area.

McCarthy Blamed for 'Hate' Whisper Chain

covering the Communist guerillas in China.

Hanson reported some virtues of the guerillas and their leaders, finding their discipline good, and that some of the top figures were men of integrity and "selfless" devotion.

He also told of the high regard with which some of the leaders were held in the area where they operated. He criticized certain followers of the right wing in Chinese politics, headed by Chiang Kai-shek.

Cited Action Against Japs

He went on to say that at that time it seemed to him the Communist guerillas were fighting the Japanese more whole-heartedly than any other element in China. McCarthy said Hanson also condemned "red baiting" by the Nationalist groups in Chungking.

McCarthy pointed out he was arrested by anti-Communist police in China. He did not mention that Hanson was also arrested by the Communists themselves and by the Japanese, and this his AP assignment resulted in his spending not only six months with the Communists, but also like periods with the Nationalists and the Japanese.

In his letter to Tydings, Hanson said "the work of the Chinese guerillas was one of the great news stories of 1938, and I wrote the story as I saw it."

His dispatches were reproduced in Time and Reader's Digest magazines, and were extensively praised as good reporting.

Hanson said in his letter that he had been investigated and cleared for loyalty and security three times by the State Department. Once was in 1942, when he was first employed. A second time was as a result of charges against him, similar to those made by McCarthy, leveled in 1947 by Representative Busbey (R., Ill.).

Under Loyalty Program

The third time was after the inception of the President's loyalty program, in accordance with the procedure prescribed. Hanson said the FBI completed a full field investigation on him in 1948, reviewing his activities in China and his writings.

Accordingly, he said, he expected official action would quickly clear his name from the "slurs upon my devotion to the United States."

But, he said, during the short time that elapsed since McCarthy's charges were made, "I am shocked to find that, as a direct result of Senator McCarthy's untrue accusations and insinuations, my family and I have been subjected to a series of humiliating incidents.

"Each of the incidents is probably trivial in itself, but shows what a chain reaction such irresponsible charges can have and, I fear, will continue to have.

"For example, a man who feeds cattle on my farm in Virginia has been asked why he continues to work with 'that Communist'. One neighboring farmer began last week to refer to me as 'that Russian spy'.

"A man near my farm made public remarks which could reflect on my credit standing, and indispensable asset in the cattle business.

Petition Circulated

"A petition calling my family undesirable and urging that we get out of the community was circulated in a village near my farm. Most people approached refused to sign it. Several of them were good enough to report the story to me. I understand a lawyer has now advised the drafter of the petition not to continue his activities.

"If these incidents were the work of an occasional gossip, I would not dignify them in a letter to a Senate committee. But these cumulative actions occurred in a decent, educated, church-going community where I have owned a farm for five years, helped others, been helped by them, and enjoyed a reciprocal friendship and respect with many of my neighbors.

"I hold no resentment against those involved in these incidents, but I deeply resent the false accusations of a United States Senator, speaking irresponsibly and protected by senatorial immunity, which can start such suspicions of resentment and hate."

Hanson told a reporter he did not believe the antagonism reflected the majority view of the community. He is preparing to move next week from his Georgetown home to his farm, as he has done each year. He said he spends about eight months each year there, commuting to work, and the rest of the year in Washington.

His 270-acre farm produces cattle, hogs and chickens. It is in a location that Hanson asked not be identified beyond the fact that it is about 12 miles south of Leesburg.

Belgian Regent Turns To Liberal in Crisis

26 Won't Return

'Shanghaied,' Assert 58 on Czech Planes

Erding, Germany, March 25 (AP).—Twenty-six Czechs tonight elected to stay in Germany as fugitives from communism, thereby partly unraveling the mystery of the dramatic, unheralded landing of three Czechoslovak planes loaded with 85 persons at this United States Air Force base yesterday.

Fifty-eight Czechs who chose to return to Czechoslovakia, among them the president of the Czech air line, said they were shanghaied in flight by seven of the 12 crewmen. They said one of the planes was captured at gun-point.

Miss Katherine Kosmak of New York City, librarian of the United States Information Service Library in Prague and the eighty-fifth occupant, returned to Czechoslovakia today.

She said most of her fellow passengers "seemed terribly surprised" when they landed here among United States Air Force men, instead of Prague, their destination.

The fleeing Czechs refused to disclose the inside story of how they arranged to get control of the three DC-3 type liners leaving from the widely separated airports of Brno, Bratislava and Ostrava and land them minutes apart in the middle of this surprised base.

A United States Air Force officer said the mass flight apparently was the result of a careful plot that perhaps involved Czech Air Line employes.

The escape was engineered as Prague seethed with unconfirmed rumors that Deputy Premier Zdenek Fierlinger had been assassinated and Rudolf Slansky, secretary general of the Czech Communist Party, seriously wounded.

These reports mingled with other unconfirmed rumors yesterday of a silent "palace revolution" at Prague and speculation that among the 26 plane fugitives were persons of prominence in the Czech government and Communist Party.

However, the United States Air Force in an announcement said the only person of importance on the planes was the president of the Czech air line, Leopold Thurner. Thurner declined to talk to reporters.

The names of the 26 remaining here were not made public.

The twin-engined planes were carrying 67 men, 16 women and 2 children when they landed here.

Brussels, March 25 (AP).—In a surprise move, Prince Regent Charles tonight asked Albert Deveze, leader of Belgium's anti-Leopold Liberal Party, to form a new cabinet.

Apparently the understanding was that Deveze, long-time Minister of Defense, would try to form a coalition of Liberals, Social Christians anad Socialists. If this were successful, the new Government's task would be to bring exiled King Leopold III back, on the premise he would abdicate in favor of his 19-year-old son, Prince Baudouin.

Few leaders gave Deveze much chance of success, since they said it is doubtful the pro-Leopold Social Christians—Belgium's largest party—will drop their determination to bring the King back.

The Social Christians said they considered Deveze's appointment a maneuver to force dissolution of Parliament and so postpone return of Leopold until after new elections, which would have to be held 40 days later.

Deveze told newsmen it would be "premature" to state what form his Governmnet would take.

"I am seeking a national solution to existing problems," he said. "Should I fail, hte logical conclusion would then be to go before the country and ask them again what they want. It would be dissolution (of the Parliament) and new elections."

Designation of Deveze was the latest development in the long battle over the return of Liepold and was the most unexpected news Belgium has had since its citizens voted March 12 by a majority of 57 percent to bring back the King.

Since that time the Social Christian (Catholic) Party, violently pro-Leopold, has been trying to form a government which could bring him home. It failed twice last week.

Anti-Leopod Socialists called strikes in Belgium's vital industries and a general strike Friday—marked by violence—with the avowe intention of preventing the King's return.

Arabs Talk Of Israel

Cairo, Egypt, March 25 (U.P.).—The seven-nation Arab League Council met here tonight to debate the most explosive problem of the Middle East—whether to accept Israel as a neighbor or oppose it as an enemy.

The premiers of Egypt, Iraq and Syria urged Arab governments to strengthen the league by forgetting their intramural squabbles.

Only Hashemite Jordan was not represented by a full delegation when retiring council Chairman Premier Khaled El Azem of Syria opened the meeting.

Jordanian Minister Bahi Eddin Taukan was the only representative of the country that has been under fire in the Egyptian press for a week for allegedly "making a deal" with Israel.

1. Those who favor accepting Israel, led by representatives of King Abdullah of Jordan, supported by powerful commercial interests in Egypt, Lebanon and Syria, and tacitly backed by Anglo-American diplomacy.

2. Those who want to form a common front against Israel's "growing strength" led by three personal enemies of Abdullah—King Ibn Saud of Saudi Arabia, renegade Jordanian Col. Abdullah el Tell, and Palestine Arab leader Haj Amin el Husseini.

Yugoslavs Vote Today

Belgrade, March 25 (NYHT).—The Yugoslav Communist regime of Premier Marshal Tito will hold elections for a new parliament Sunday. The elections will be like those staged in the Soviet Union in that candidates running for 620 seats are unopposed.

A vote of more than 95 percent for Marshal Tito is expected to be reported by the government.

Although Tito and other Communist leaders have admitted recently that they are meeting strong resistance from peasants, who constitute about 75 percent of the population, the elections are being held without any reported disorder.

The principal theme of Tito's campaign was that a vote against the present regime would be a vote for enslavement of Yugoslavia by the Soviet Politburo. However, strong anti-American propaganda also marked the campaign.

Iceland Reds Jailed

Reykjavik, Iceland, March 25 (U.P.).—Twenty Communists today were sentenced to jail terms of 3 to 18 months for instigating an anti-American riot last year as Parliament ratified participation in the Atlantic Pact.

Italian Reds Repulsed in Attack on Hospital

Rome, March 25 (U.P.).—A Communist mob attacked the San Sevro Hospital today in an attempt to remove comrades who were among the 40 persons injured in Thursday's bloody insurrection in the southern Italian city.

Police riot squads drove off the large band after a struggle that lasted half an hour.

Almost simultaneously, another Communist band tried to storm the jail at nearby Ascoli Satriano to free leftist leaders held there. The attack collapsed when heavily armed carabinieri appeared in force.

In Atella, in the southern region of Lucania, a mob stormed the local employment office, broke up furniture and destroyed files. Police ousted the group and arrested 14 persons. At Ruoti, in the same area, police dispersed peasants who seized and started to plow the fields of a local landowner.

The new violence came as the Italian cabinet met in emergency session to hear Interior Minister Mario Scelba report on new security measures to deal with Communist-led riots that have caused four deaths and left some 600 injured in the past week.

The government announced that all public rallies had been banned for a month in the province of Foggia. The ban was extended to two months in San Severo itself.

In the meantime, Communist labor leaders called off plans for a 6-hour public service strike tomorrow because anti-Communists unionists refused to go along. It had been called for government railway, postal, telegraph and other employes in support of wage demands.

4 Killed, 14 Injured

Calcutta, India, March 25 (AP).—Bombs, rocks and guns were reported used in Moslem-Hindu riots in nearby Howrah today and at least four persons were killed and 14 injured.

Authorities in Hyderabad State said order had been restored at Yadgir, where five persons were killed and 33 wounded in rioting Thursday.

7 Killed as B-25 Explodes in Air

Phoenix, Ariz., March 25 (AP).—A converted B-25 blew up in the air near here today and plunged seven employes of North American Aviation Co., Los Angeles, to their deaths.

Pieces of the plane were scattered over a half-mile area. The main part plowed a five-foot-deep trench in a field.

This was the second major plane crash in Arizona in three days. An Air Force B-50 exploded in flight and fell on the desert near Gila Bend Thursday, killing 12.

North American's B-25 was bound from Washington, D. C., to Los Angeles. It had taken off at El Paso today.

The plane was flying through drizzling rain when it exploded over State Highway 87 about three miles from Chandler, southeast of Phoenix. The crash occurred about 11:45 a. m. There was no fire.

A list of the dead included Tyrus H. Kehmeier, a North American technical representative assigned to the Patuxent naval air station.

U.N. Veto Was Devised by U. S., Foreign Policy Review Shows

Russians. A policy recommendation dated September 23, 1943, warned against a partition of Germany, and called for "a harmony of policy" between the American and British governments on one hand and Russia on the other.

"In case of friction," the State Department planners wrote, "Germany would be in a position to hold the balance of power, with disastrous results both for treaty limitations and for political stability at home.

"The Soviet government, in turn, would be in a position to use the Communist strength in Germany to the great disadvantage of the internal political peace of Germany and to the comparably great advantage of Russian interests."

The same planning group urged that the United States and Britain should promptly announce their support of a future German democracy; otherwise, it warned, the Communists might win control of the democratic movement "and therefore establish a Russian hegemony in Germany."

But in general, the State Department assumed that the Great Powers would coperate; and it based its plans for the future United Nations on the thesis that no Great Power could coerce the other.

By July 14, 1943, a special subcommittee headed by Undersecretary Sumner Welles had worked out a draft constitution of an international organization, in which there would be an executive committee of the United States, Britain, Russia and China. This committee would be responsible for international security, and would have to decide non-procedural questions by a unanimous vote—that is, with each Great Power having the right of veto.

This draft also provided for a "Council of 11 members, a "general conference" analagous to the present General Assembly, a secretariat, an international court, and regional trusteeship councils to administer the affairs of non-self-governing peoples.

A month later this draft became more specific in the form of a "Charter of the United Nations" worked out by a research staff under Dr. Leo Pasvolsky. In many of its provisions, and even in some of its wording, the Pasvolsky document was an authentic forerunner of the San Francisco Charter.

It did away with the "executive committee"; instead it put the four great powers on "The Council" as permanent members, and provided that nonprocedural decisions must have their unanimous concurrence. It also outlined methods of taking sanctions, including the use of force, against even an intended breach of the peace, and it provided most of the structure and the principles now embodied in the Charter.

Finally, on December 29, 1943, just after President Roosevelt had returned from the Teheran conference, Secretary Hull sent him a memorandum embodying the Pasvolsky plan, with further changes but still maintaining the great power veto. It specified that the great powers should have permanent seats on the council in view of their "exceptional responsibilities," and that in the event of a dispute the Great Powers would have to be unanimous in voting on settlement or enforcement measures.

The American plans did undergo changes in the Great Power talks at Dumbarton Oaks in 1944 and still others at the San Francisco Conference. But the newly published documents show that in its essentials the Charter had been worked out in the State Department before it reached the stage of international negotiations.

The new book also tells of Secretary Hull's efforts to consult Republicans as well as Democrats in Congress about the future United Nations organization. The "nonpartisan" consultation, as the book calls it, went so far that an effort was made to sound out Gov. Thomas E. Dewey in 1944 even before the Republican convention had nominated him for President.

"Several weeks before the convention," the book says, "steps were initiated to ascertain the prospects of a favorable statement by Governor Dewey, widely regarded as the leading candidate for the Republican nomination, on international security organization.

"These steps were undertaken on the initiative of Myron C. Taylor and approved by Secretary Hull and by the President, with a view to assuring nonpartisanship on this matter in the approaching political campaign."

Taylor gave one "eminent Republican" a confidential copy of the State Department's plan for the United Nations.

But Taylor thought better of it after letting a group of "eminent Republicans" give Dewey a confidential copy of the State Department's plan for the United Nations. On Republican advice he decided a pre-convention statement by Dewey might be misused, especially since Dewey was only one of several candidates.

Dewey waited until after his nomination to issue a statement on American membership in the United Nations.

The book, with its accompanying documents, is on sale at the Government Printing Office for $2.25.

military and civil defense purposes, the very liberties we are trying to make secure will themselves be endangered."

Conceding that this country isn't ready for an atomic attack, Larsen said civilian defense planning must be done at the community level, with the Federal Government standing ready to aid.

William A. Gill, coordinator of the NSRB's civil defense planning, disclosed that arrangements are under way to link this country's defenses with those of Canada.

Larsen said if an American city were attacked now, it would have to rely largely on its own fire-fighting, police and medical services, with technical assistance from the Federal Government.

He urged passage of a bill by Senator Edwin C. Johnson (D., Colo.), which would authorize use of Federal services and supplies in alleviating any disasters.

Larsen said the question of being ready for an attack is "necessarily a relative matter," adding:

"Frankly, I wonder whether we would want to be in a state of absolute readiness. Do we want our women and children evacuated from our cities? Can our cities stand the cost of moving their hospitals and fire stations to outlying areas?

"We believe at the present time the soundest approach is to stimulate State and community planning of how they would handle such problems as evacuation and of how one community could call on another for aid."

Maneuvers Will Span Continent

The Air Frce disclosed yesterday that it will conduct big-scale continental defense and other maneuvers during the year starting July 1.

The Army and Navy also will take part in extensive maneuvers during which many thousands of paratroopers, airborne soldiers and other forces will see action.

Altogether, the Air Force plans 15 maneuvers. Five are listed as strictly continental air defense operations.

In the defensive exercises, one phase will cover all the United States east of the Mississippi. Seven fighter groups—525 planes—will participate.

One exercise will cover the Northwestern States with more than 160 fast interceptor and all-weather planes carrying out defense missions. More than 60 of the same planes will fly from bases in the Southwest in "Operation Cactus."

The Army said it is planning 14 exercises during the year. Some 36,000 troops will take part in a Fort Bragg operation with the Air Force. A force of 25,000 regulars augmented by reserves will conduct armored exercises at Camp Hood, Tex.

The Navy is planning exercises in both the Atlantic and Pacific. Some will be held jointly with British, French, Canadian and Dutch fleets.

Scientists are getting ready to change speed into matter on an unprecedented scale.

They will do it, the Atomic Energy Commission announced yesterday, with a machine which will drive the tiniest atomic particles around an electronic "race track" at velocities closer to the speed of light than man ever before has achieved.

The machine, to be set up at the California Institute of Technology in Pasadnena, will be a one-billion-volt election accelerator, the most powerful ever made.

It will drive electrons around a course 23 feet in diameter at speeds only one-millionth of 1 percent less than the velocity of light.

Decades ago Albert Einstein showed mathematically that acceleration increases the mass of objects.

Electrons, the negatively charged particles which surround the nuclei of atoms, weigh only 1/1840 as much as protons, the positively charged nuclear particles.

Speeded to the velocities expected from the new one-billion-volt machine, electrons will grow in mass until they weigh several times as much as the normally 1840 times heavier protons.

Thus speed will have become mass, and the weight of electrons will have been multiplied several thousand times merely by acceleration.

Up to now the most powerful electron accelerators have produced velocities within 1 percent of the speed of light.

The Pasadena machine will supply the most powerful electron and X-ray beams available to science for the study of atomic nuclei. It will be used particularly in the study of mesons.

'Saucer' Designed for Axis

Rome, March 25 (U.P.).—One of Italy's foremost turbine engineers said that Adolf Hitler and Benito Mussolini experimented with "flying saucer" bombs during the war, and speculated that "some great power" had taken up where they left off.

Prof. Giuseppe Belluzzo said he personally had drawn plans for a "flying disk" but that the design "disappeared" with Mussolini in 1943 when the Italian dictator fled to northern Italy.

The flying disk as an instrument of war "had been studied and designed in Germany and Italy in 1942 to give those countries a formidable weapon for victory," Belluzzo, a former Fascist government minister, said today.

"According to those designs, the disk could carry a cargo of explosives of any kind—and today an atomic bomb—to destroy entire cities," he said.

Belluzzo said the disc he designed had a diameter of 10 meters (32.5 feet).

"The principle of the flying disk is very simple," he said. "Its construction is easy and it can be made of very light metal.

Two jet pipes, facing opposite directions, and placed on either side of the disk, provide the locomotion, he explained.

Piccard Believes He May Be Responsible

Minneapolis, March 25 (U.P.).—Stratosphere-exploring Dr. Jean Piccard said today he may be to blame for most reports of "flying saucers."

The 66-year-old aeronautical engineer professor at the University of Minnesota, said there are three kinds of "flying saucers." The first is the kind which hasn't been explained scientifically. People's imaginations account for the second kind, and as for the third:

"I think I may be responsible for most of the cases where people think they have seen them," Piccard said.

He thinks people saw "his" balloons, the kind he designed to carry scientific instruments miles into the sky. He developed them after two Army officers exceeded his 1934 climb into stratosphere with a 72,394-foot ascent. Piccard wanted to reach 100,000 feet, but ordinary balloons would never do it.

"If you make a balloon big enough to carry you that high, it won't," he said. "It is big enough but too heavy."

So he designed small balloons made from cellophane. Now they are made from thin plastic film and are great 90-foot diameter bags which carry scientific apparatus far higher than man ever has flown.

"They are transparent and look like soap bubbles," he said. "Someone who sees one high in the air looks surprised. He has not heard of balloons. He has heard of saucers. So, he says flying saucers."

High Court Takes Up Tideland Oil Monday

By Chalmers M. Roberts
Post Reporter

The Federal Government Monday will assert before the Supreme Court its claim to "paramount" rights in the oil-rich tidelands off the shores of Texas and Louisiana.

Nearly three years ago, the Court agreed in a 6-to-2 decision to a similar claim in California's case. It has taken the Government 1½ years to bring the latest cases before the high court.

Justice William O. Douglas returned to Washington yesterday to sit in on the Court's regular Saturday conference. He will be on the bench Monday for the first time this term. In a horseback-riding accident last October 2, he suffered 14 cracked ribs and a punctured lung. Yesterday he was the picture of ruddy health as he told a reporter he was 100 percent recovered.

ASSOCIATE JUSTICE WILLIAM O. DOUGLAS of the Supreme Court was back at his desk yesterday wearing a red necktie and a heavy suntan. He said he was 100 per cent recovered from last October's horseback riding accident. The justice said he tested his wind before leaving Arizona for Washington by climbing an 8000-foot mountain on the Mexican border and tested his injured back by a three-day lion hunt, during which he spent 12 hours a day in the saddle. He will be on the bench Monday for the first time during this term of the court

Jackson and Clark Out

With Justices Robert H. Jackson and Tom C. Clark out of the cases, they will be decided by a seven-man court. Jackson did not sit in the California case and Clark prosecuted the Texas and Louisiana cases while Attorney General.

More than even the rich oil lands is involved in the Texas-Louisiana cases. Charges have been made that oil interests which have strongly backed the States in their fight with the Government also backed the Dixiecrat movement in an effort to defeat the Truman Administration at the polls in 1948 and that they will do it again in 1952.

The President vetoed a bill in 1946 which would have given the disputed areas to the States. In the Eightieth Congress the House again passed such a bill but it did not come to a Senate vote. The legislative stalemate continues—the President opposes any such gift, the Congress refused to pass Administration bills to permit the Interior Department to lease or operate the areas in which it won control in California. If the Government should win in Texas and Louisiana as well, it still would not be able to make use of the oil until some compromise can be reached in Congress.

Outside State Waters

Actually, the dispute is not over the "tidelands" areas between high and low tide marks. The Government concedes this belongs to the States. The dispute is over the areas in the Gulf of Mexico seaward from the low water marks and outside the inland waters of the States. This includes what is know as the continental shelf, extending far into the Gulf and under which lie potential billions of dollars worth of oil.

The Government contends the Louisiana and Texas cases are no better than California's argument, which wasn't good enough. Louisiana has dug up a forgotten 100-year-old court decision which it argues shows the areas belong to the State.

Louisiana also contends there is nothing but an "abstract" argument before the court because of the legislative deadlock with the President. The State says the results would be "shocking" if the Government wins—no drilling or exploration would be possible and hence no new oil reserves would be found. In case of war, Louisiana contends, this would endanger the national security.

Was Independent Nation

Texas' case is built primarily around the fact the Lone Star State was an independent nation before it joined the Union, a nation with a navy to guard its Gulf shores.

Texas yesterday dumped a 300-page brief on the Government. The result is a weekend of work both for Solicitor General Philip B. Perlman and his staff and for the court justices. Normally, briefs are filed at least a week before arguments.

The late filing, with court permission, put the Government in the position of writing its answer before seeing the State's argument. But it preferred to do this rather than to agree to any further delay. Perlman has repeatedly charged the States with stalling in an effort to avoid a Supreme Court adjudication of the Federal claim.

In the California case, the court held that the Federal interest in the off-shore lands was dominant because of the sea's relationship to national defense and the conduct of foreign affairs.

Not Surrendered Texas Says

Texas argues that in the 1845 annexation it did not surrender any of the rights of ownership it had as a nation. The Annexation Act, passed by Congress, left to Texas "all the vacant and unappropriated lands lying within its limits." Texas claims this meant the offshore areas; the Federal Government says it meant nothing more than normal public lands within the State.

In recent years the Texas Legislature has extended the Gulf boundary to the edge of the continental shelf. The Government does not contest this "boundary" as such but argues it, rather than Texas, has any rights which may exist in that area.

Perlman will argue that Texas, if it did have any ownership and control over the disputed areas as a nation, surrendered them by annexation.

Both Texas and Louisiana will have a battery of lawyers on hand for the cases, likely to extend through Tuesday. Texas' peppery attorney general, Price Daniel, and a Louisiana political figure who was a founder of the Dixiecrat movement, Leander Perez, will argue the cases against Perlman.

A decision is not likely before the very end of the court's term, probably late in June.

Prince Georges Commissioners Face Big Job . . .

By Tom Kelley—The Washington Post

from the thousands of new homes built there recently.

But even so, the county commissioners may have to consider raising the tax rate to plunge deeper into the backlog of county improvements so glaringly needed—roads, schools, police.

Police Chief Ralph Brown has an interesting story to tell about Prince Georgeans and their tax rate. About four years ago, he said, he went to 27 civic and patriotic county organizations and made a speech about the need for more county policemen. Members of all 27 organizations admitted they were convinced that the county force was inadequate.

Chief Brown asked each organization to write a letter to the county heads asking for an increased force and expressing willingness to pay increased taxes to finance it. He said that of the 27 organizations, only one came through with a letter.

Awakened Interest

In the postwar years, there have been some indications, however, that county residents are more willing to participate in their local government than in the past.

This awakened interest has had two focal points recently:

1. The Sothoron bill itself, defended by its proponents as a modernization of what had been essentially a satisfactory form of government; and attacked by its antagonists as a political maneuver to ward off more sweeping governmental changes.

2. Demand for a survey of the county's government. This demand preceded the bill and overlapped its introduction into the Maryland General Assembly this winter. The survey request was denied by the county commissioners on the eve of the public hearing on the Sothoron bill.

The awakening interest in county government affairs has come from organizations like the county League of Women Voters and the county Civic Federation. Their spokesmen have been vigorous in attacking the streamlining reorganization bill; they have been equally vigorous in advocating a survey as a possible prelude to a charter form of government in Prince Georges County.

Extent to which these interests represent the county voters will be accurately guaged next November, when county officers, assemblymen and commissioners are up for election.

Tomorrow: The changes that can be wrought in Prince Georges County under the Sothoron Act.

WAF Sergeant Raped And Slain on Coast

Associated Press WIREPHOTO
S/SERGT. FAIRY DECKER
Strangled to death

Hamilton Field Air Base, Calif., March 25 (U.P.).—A WAF sergeant was raped and garroted commando-fashion with her dog-tag chain behind her barracks today.

The nearly nude body of Sergt. Fairy Decker, 43, of York, Pa., a Sunday school teacher at the base, was found sprawled on a grassy plot 6 feet behind the barracks.

"Three or four" soldiers were picked up for questioning, including Sergt. Lyle H. Buswell, Eighth Air Force Squadron, who said he discovered the body when he parked his car.

The FBI promptly took over the investigation and sought to keep the details secret, but Coroner Frank Keaton said Sergeant Decker apparently was attacked from behind by an assailant familiar with commando tactics.

Her left eye was blackened and her neck bruised with finger marks and the welt of the chain. Her body was found lying face up.

Sergeant Decker's olive-drab shirt had been yanked down over her shoulders to just above her elbows—another commando tactic used to pin down arm movements of a victim. The shirt was the only item of clothing not ripped from her body.

She lay on a pile of her own clothing—her skirt, a torn brassiere, panties and stockings.

Friends of Sergeant Decker described her as an "extremely nice, quiet girl." Last night she had been assigned to barrack guard duty.

One of her assignments had been to make a check of a nearby building to see if the dayroom was locked. Investigators found the dayroom closed and locked and surmised Sergeant Decker had made the 11 p. m. check last night.

Sergeant Decker had been at Hamilton Field for nearly a year. She came here last April after a two-year and seven-month assignment in Japan.

The barracks where she was assigned adjoined the married non-commissioned officers' quarters.

A detachment of several hundred Air Force men to be transferred this morning for overseas duty was not detained. All had been confined to quarters except the sentries. There were no sentries on duty near the crime scene, although the base itself is patroled.

Sergeant Decker, who enlisted in 1942, was the wife of a disabled World War I veteran and mother of a 22-year-old son.

The husband, Paul Decker, 58, operates a junk business.

Police Trace Footprints Near G-Girl's Body

Miss Taylor

Christiansburg, Va., March 25 (U.P.).—Officers found a faint footprint trail today on the scenic mountainside where a killer or killers tossed the bludgeoned body of a lovely blonde girl.

They called it the most important clue yet in the murder of Alice Marie Taylor, 24-year-old Government worker from Roanoke.

Alice Marie's body, fully clothed except for her shoes, was found about 20 feet off a scenic highway winding over Brush Mountain between Christiansburg and Blacksburg.

Sheriff George Arrington said that the footprints, partly muddled by rain, were too faint to provide a cast but it was hoped they would indicate the foot size and type of shoes worn by the person who made them.

Meanwhile a complete autopsy was under way today on the girl's body with the approval of the State's chief medical examiner.

Roanoke police, assuming responsibility for the investigation after identification of the body late Friday, requested a complete examination and medical report.

In Roanoke, where Alice Marie worked for the Veterans' Administration, officers under City Detective Capt. Frank Webb searched into the girl's background.

Her fellow workers knew her as a shy, retiring person seldom seen with men. But Webb said apparently she had "more than one" boy freind. He was questioning youths who had gone out with her.

A $500 reward was posted by the city of Roanoke for information leading to the arrest and conviction of the person or persons responsible for the girl's death.

The girl had had an engagement on Thursday evening with a youth whose name was not disclosed. The boy went to her home and waited for her but Alice Marie never showed up.

She had left the VA office late that afternoon, complaining that she did not feel well. No one had come forward to report seeing her alive after that time.

Fugitive's Landlady Held in $50,000 Bail

New York, March 25 (NYHT).—A Staten Island woman who rented a room to Willie Sutton, bank robber and jail breaker, until four weeks ago was held in $50,000 bail today as a material witness in the $64,000 robbery of a bank in Sunnyside, Long Island, on March 9.

The woman failed to account for the source of $850 she deposited in a Staten Island bank six days after the robbery, or for $500 with which she paid off a mortgage on her home, Albert E. Short, assistant district attorney of Queens County, told Judge Peter T. Farrell, of Queens County Court.

The witness, Miss Mary Corbett, 38, was a fellow employe of Sutton at the Seaview Farm Colony, a city poor farm, on Staten Island for two years before she rented him a room last August, according to police.

Miss Corbett told Judge Farrell that she had not seen Sutton since he left her house several days before the robbery, and had not recognized his published pictures. She said she hadn't even heard of the robbery.

Short said the $850 deposit was made on March 15 with the Northfield Savings and Loan Association, Staten Island. He said police had learned that Miss Corbett had planned to sell her house and return to Ireland, whence she came in 1938.

Inspector John J. Appell, in charge of Queens detectives, said that police received information about two weeks ago that Sutton, known as "The Actor," had once worked for the farm colony.

Disguised as gardners, detectives went there and after questioning attendants were convinced that the man they sought for directing the robbery of the Sunnyside branch of the Manufacturers Trust Co. on March 9 had worked there as Edward Lynch.

Employed as a porter at a living-in salary of $1300 a year, he worked there from February, 1947, until July 15, 1949.

Miss Corbett was trailed by detectives for 10 days until 3:50 a. m. today when she was taken into custody and questioned.

Sutton had been the object of a Nation-wide hunt since his escape from the Pennsylvania prison at Philadelphia, and the search was intensified after he was identified from rogue's gallery pictures as leader of the band of five robbers who took $63,933 from the Sunnyside bank.

Sutton's police record includes two escapes and a long list of cleverly executed robberies. He also is wanted for questioning in the $1,500,000 Brink's holdup in Boston.

U. of Va. Army Instructor Held in Alleged Rape

Charlottesville, Va., March 25 (AP).—An Army instructor at the University of Virginia was held here today on a charge of raping a 23-year-old woman.

Bond has been set at $3500 for the instructor, identified by Albemarle County Deputy Sheriff Abbott Smith as Albert Anderson, 27, father of a five-week-old baby.

Smith said the woman told him she, two young girls and a man were riding near Charlottesville when their car became stuck on the side of the road.

Anderson drove by, she said, and when efforts to pull the car failed, offered to get help from Charlottesville.

She and the other girls decided to ride with him, she said. After their male companion, she stepped into the car, she added, the Army ROTC instructor drove off, leaving the two girls and Anderson pulled off the road outside Charlottesville and attacked her twice, she said.

The most important telecast is one you'll never see

WITHIN the very walls of the giant Du Mont receiver plant—largest of its kind in the world—is a Du Mont-built television station you've never heard of, telecasting a picture you'll never see.

The only television screens on which this telecast appears are the screens of Du Mont receivers as they near final assembly.

The only people to see it are Du Mont test engineers, who study the picture with super-critical eye. Any slightest deviation in picture clarity, in picture brilliance, in contrast or focus is reason enough to mark a set "REJECT".

Every Du Mont receiver must be perfect to pass this point.

And right here you have the sort of thing Du Mont does that makes Du Mont receivers the standard of excellence in television.

You'll see the results in the sharpness and realness of the Du Mont picture on the big direct-view Du Mont picture tube.

You'll see the results in picture steadiness and freedom from distortion, and in the longer life of a Du Mont receiver.

You'll know, in every living moment of television enjoyment, that Du Mont has created an exceptional instrument.

That's why there is a very special kind of pride in owning a Du Mont receiver set. No lesser set can give the same satisfaction, because no set is built quite like a Du Mont.

To Train Others

Specialists To Get Study On A-Bomb

Selection of nine District specialists to attend courses starting Monday on methods for coping with A-bomb attacks was announced yesterday at the District Building.

Purpose of the courses, developed by the National Security Resources Board and other agencies, is to instruct qualified men who will return home to train others. They deal with radiological monitoring—determining the amount of harmful radiation in a bombed area—and medical aspects of atomic warfare.

Assistant Engineer Commissioner Thomas J. Hayes 3d, said Herman Branson, Howard University physics professor, will attend a five-week course on radiological monitoring at Brookhaven National Laboratory on Long Island.

Eight physicians, representing medical schools and societies and the District Health Department, will attend a one-week session on medical aspects at Johns Hopkins University, Hayes said. They are: Drs. John McCoy, Lloyd H. Newman, Murray Copeland, Richard L. Whelton, William D. Claudy, John B. Ross, Roy Lyman Sexton and O'Donnald H. Sheppard.

Unpartisan Policy Asked

States special representative to the Nations in the ERP. Its report, recommending that the United States could and should undertake a large foreign aid program, was a factor in winning public and congressional acceptance of the plan broached by former Secretary of State George C. Marshall in his speech at Harvard University on June 5, 1947.

Letter to Hoffman

Senator Vandenberg wrote Hoffman:

"I was one of those who insisted that ECA had to be preceded by the studies of the 'Harriman Commission' — mobilizing the best brains available for consultation—to determine what role is 'wisest and safest' for America, for her own self-interest, in facing the threats of the postwar crisis.

"The ECA was the result. As we approach the statutory end of ECA in 1952, I think it would be well for another such commission—equally unpartisan and equally impeccable in character—to resume independent, advisory studies of our new responsibilities as the world's largest creditor Nation and the world's spearhead in the quest of dependable peace."

Last month both Hoffman and Secretary of State Dean Acheson told the House Foreign Affairs Committee at foreign-aid hearing that they would favor establishing a new "Harriman Committee."

Secretary Acheson made it clear at the time that he did not think such a group should be brought into being too soon. He feels it should begin its work nearer the time when the ECA is scheduled to end on June 30, 1952. Otherwise, he fears, the impact of its findings might "peter out" in the interval between the time they are reported and the time for decision by Congress on post-ECA policy.

Student's Illness Not Due to Pills

given on the package," the warning stated.

Yesterday, however, Dr. Bishop admitted that the student's plight, from which he was revived out of a deathlike coma only after an hour of heroic rescue efforts, could have followed a normal or even smaller dosage in his case.

Similar violent reactions from the fortunately rare oversensitivity some individuals have for certain substances have often been reported in medical literature. Relatively little, however, has been recorded on such reactions to the antihistamines, which themselves are used to thwart sensitivity to other substances.

Perhaps the most common hypersensitivity is the one some individuals have to hen's eggs. Such individuals become deathly sick after knowingly or unknowingly eating even a little bit of egg or of some foods containing eggs.

Mutter, who said yesterday that the treatment "stopped my cold dead," declared that there is reasonable doubt that he took an overdose. He said he recalls taking the prescribed initial dose of two pills just before joining some friends at poker at the College Park (Md.) Firehouse, where he is a volunteer fireman.

He put two other pills in a pocket to take later, at the one-every-four-hours interval prescribed, he explained. Investigators found five pills missing from the bottle, and assumed he had taken all five.

"What happened to the one pill that can't be accounted for I probably never will know," he declared. "It may have dropped out while they were taking me to the school infirmary. I don't remember taking it, and I think I would (remember)."

The student said it was the first and only time he had ever tried any of the new "cold-stopper" pills, adding that "it's also my last time."

Joseph Mylunas of Baltimore, an inspector for the Food and Drugs Administration which last October approved public sale of the antihistamine pills, investigated for the Federal agency after Friday's account in The Washington Post.

His chief, Allen Retzlaff, head of the Baltimore Office of FDA, said yesterday that Mylunas' report had not yet been fully prepared, but that the early findings indicated the "hypersensitivity" cause. The pills remaining in the bottle, Retzlaff said, will be laboratory-tested to make certain they contain the prescribed amount of the drug.

Survives Rare Heart Operation

Associated Press WIREPHOTO
DONALD CONSTABLE, JR.
Operation a success

Philadelphia, March 25 (AP).—Episcopal Hospital today announced three Philadelphia surgeons successfully operated on a human heart by cutting through the patient's neck, not his chest, with a new, still unnamed instrument. The announcement said it was the first operation of its kind in medical history.

The operation was performed on the aortic valve, described as "the main connection" between the heart and the rest of the body. It was performed Thursday on Donald Constable, jr., 26, of Johnstown, Pa. Names of the doctors were not disclosed.

Constable's heart was overworked because of a diseased aortic valve, which restricted the amount of blood leaving the heart to circulate through the body. The disease also had enlarged the heart.

In the operation, the surgeons cut open an artery in Constable's neck, checking the blood flow.

The new instrument—an 18-inch stainless steel tube—with a protruding flange attachment—was pushed down the artery until the rounded end touched the diseased valve.

The surgeons slipped the tube 1½ inches into the valve, then pressed a flange on the end of the instrument. This opened the diseased sections of the valve, widening it slightly. The tube was withdrawn after four minutes.

The instrument was developed only a week ago by specialists at the George P. Piling & Son Co. here. It is ½ inch in diameter. It was delivered only 24 hours before the operation.

Constable's ailment resulted from rheumatic fever at the age of 9. Doctors pointed out that the operation will not restore the flow of blood from heart to body normally, but will relieve the strain on the heart.

Red Cross Hits 71 Pct. Of 1950 Goal

The Department of Defense yesterday crashed over the top in the Red Cross campaign with 108 percent of quota raised.

Paul H. Griffith, Assistant Secretary of Defense, is chairman for the defense unit, whose goal was $97,000.

With 71 percent of the over-all goal of $1,039,000 raised thus far, Daniel W. Bell, campaign chairman, yesterday called for all-out efforts to raise the remainder.

Particularly he urged Government campaign workers to canvass Government employes on the one pay day remaining this month.

Hearing Set On D. C. Child Care Program

A Senate District Subcommittee will hear witnesses at 11 a. m. next Thursday on a bill to extend the District child day care center program for a year.

The hearing was called by Senator Lester C. Hunt (D., Wyo.), chairman of the Senate District Fiscal Affairs Subcommittee. It will be in the Senate District Committee room in the Capitol.

The subcommittee also will hear testimony on the House-approved bill to start the five-day workweek for District firemen this summer, provided Congress grants the necessary personnel increase. Existing law would cut the week from six days effective six months after Congress grants the funds.

Adm. Momsen To Discuss War Of Submarines

"Undersea Warfare" will be discussed by Rear Adm. C. B. Momsen, assistant chief of naval operations for undersea warfare, at a luncheon here Monday.

Admiral Momsen will address the regular monthly meeting of the Washington Post, Society of American Military Engineers, at 12:30 p. m. at the Burlington Hotel.

The annual convention of the National Speleological Society will be held Friday through Sunday at the Dodge Hotel.

Opening session will be at 1 p. m. Friday with the annual banquet at 7 p. m. Saturday. Society President Dr. Ralph W. Stone will address the banquet on the subject, "Some Western Caves." A field trip will be conducted on Sunday to the Massanutten Caverns near Harrisonburg, Va.

Other meetings of scientific groups this week are as follows:

Romulo Suggests Scientists' Talks On Atom Controls

Lake Success, March 25 (AP).—Carlos P. Romulo, president of the United Nations Assembly, suggested tonight that a new conference of scientists be called to study the problem of controlling atomic and other weapons of mass destruction.

The Philippines statesman coupled such a conference with the special top-level Security Council meeting that Secretary General Trygve Lie has proposed as the first step in a 20-year U. N. peace program.

The results of the scientific conference, Romulo said, "could be made the basis of action, compromise or at least further study in the next special meeting of the Security Council."

He said eminent scientists have said that control of military use of atomic energy could be judged better if a survey were made of possible peace uses for atomic energy. His statements were made in a radio broadcast.

Library of Congress Said to Be Largest

By Lee Grove
Post Reporter

The Library of Congress, preparing to observe its sesquicentennial anniversary April 24, is believed to be the world's largest library.

Librarian Luther H. Evans in the annual report filed with both Houses of Congress this week said that exclusive of 2,274,497 unbound newspapers and parts of periodicals and serials awaiting binding, the library contains "an estimated total of 27,560,873 pieces."

Among these "pieces" are 8,689,639 volumes and pamphlets, and 128,055 bound volumes of newspapers. Manuscript material, maps, reels of microfilm and motion pictures, printed and other recorded music, prints and photostats are among other items included.

150-Year Investment

By the end of the fiscal year 1949 the library represented a total 150-year investment of public moneys totaling $117,717,629, the report stated. It received appropriations totaling $9,054,262 for purchase of materials for its collections, and from non-Government sources gifts of money totaling $6,495,624.

"A fact not generally understood beyond the confines of the Capitol is the fact that the Library of Congress belongs to Congress. It has always belonged to Congress," the report said.

The total of 22,852 inquiries from Congress received and handled by the Legislative Reference Service during the last year was an all-time high, the report said; with the more than 3000 requests received in the single month of March exceeding by 50 percent the total of a year's work a quarter of a century ago.

During the fiscal year some 866,669 readers used 2,142,653 units of material inside the Library buildings, and 239,188 loans were made.

Readers were chiefly interested in the history of the United States and other peoples, and with new science and new technologies, and least interested in military and naval science.

Readers in the Slavic Room totaled 6651, more than twice the number the preceding year, and readers in the Japanese and other Far Eastern sections also increased.

Annual acquisitions have grown to a size where, in fiscal 1949, it amounted to more than seven million pieces, the report said.

Mammoth Collection

Indicative of the library's strength in some fields is the fact that it has the largest collection of Chinese books and manuscripts outside China and Japan, the largest collection of Russian material outside the USSR, the largest collection of maps and charts in the world, the largest law library in the United States, and greatest number of books printed during the first half century of printing, prior to 1500, in the Western Hemisphere.

The library will open the first of a series of sesquicentennial exhibits April 24. Other exhibits and programs are scheduled throughout the year.

F. R. Jelleff To Get Award For Service

Jelleff

Frank R. Jelleff was named yesterday as the recipient of the Cosmopolitan Club's Distinguished Service Medal for 1949 for the "most outstanding and unselfish service to his community in 1949."

Cosmopolitan Club President Robert G. Carter said presentation of the medal will be made at a special meeting of the club, the date to be announced later.

High-ranking Government and District officials and prominent citizens of Washington, including the heads of all service clubs, will be invited to join the Cosmopolitans in honoring Jelleff.

Jelleff was selected for the award by a committee headed by John A. Reilly, president of the Second National Bank. Other committee members were A. W. Defenderfer, Maurice R. Colbert, William L. King, Robert W. McChesney, Fred Rice and William C. Kiesler.

Jelleff, who is unofficially known as "Mr. Community Chest of Washington," helped organize the Chest in 1929 and has been active in its work since then. He was the first president of the Community Chest Federation when it was formed in 1946.

He was in the group that launched the first Boys' Club here and was club president from 1920 to 1940. After serving as chairman of the board from 1940 to 1944, he was elected president emeritus.

He has served as a board member of the Industrial Home School and member and president of the District Parole Board.

He is president and treasurer of Frank R. Jelleff, Inc., 1214 F st. nw., and a member of the Board of Trade, Rotary Club, Metropolitan Club and other organizations.

other labor market areas have from 7 to 12 percent of the workers unemployed.

"These reports are disturbing because there is at present no prospect that business activity will increase enough in 1950 to restore 'full employment'," the publication declared. "Meanwhile, new workers coming into the labor force increase the number out of work."

The AFL urged its locals throughout the country to take action at once in initiating State and community full employment committees to stem the tide of unemployment. Such committees, the AFL said, could develop local resources to meet needs, obtain new customers, new products, new uses for old products.

"Job Guide Issued

The Bureau of Employment Security yesterday released its new "Job Guide for Young Workers" to give school and college students entering the labor market this year an idea of the best work opportunities.

Bureau Director Goodwin in a report to Secretary of Labor Maurice J. Tobin, said that while many suitable jobs will be available to the graduates, the new entrants into the labor market will have to work harder to get them because the competition for the jobs will be keener than at any time in the past 10 years.

Federal and State employment agencies will not only be equipped with the job guides, but also are collecting correct job information to aid young job seekers, Goodwin said. He urged the new job hunters to seek assistance at any of the 1800 employment offices.

Union Seeks Cicognani Aid

AFL assembly, the Central Labor Union, for help, and a delegation of AFL officials conferred with Archbishop O'Boyle. This weekend the Central Labor Union, through President C. F. Preller, appealed to the Vatican representative in Washington.

"Disregard of Rights"

Preller stated the Central Labor Union is confident that if the Apostolic Delegate looks into the "disgraceful situation," he will find a "flagrant disregard" of the rights of labor as maintained by the traditional position of the Catholic Church.

"The Central Labor Union and Local 82 have taken every other means in an effort to show the Georgetown authorities that the Constitution of the United States and the pronouncements of the Catholic Church do not frown upon efforts of workers to band together for mutual betterment," Preller wrote, adding:

"We hesitate to take further action before hearing from you."

The announcement was made yesterday after judging of the largest press competition ever conducted. DelVecchio's picture, one of the 3002 entered, was made last summer at Anacostia swimming pool

Potato Import Duty Cut May Be Forced

million bushels of certified seed and one million table stock.

At present, due to our high price supports Canada can ship in potatoes, either by rail or water, pay the tariff of 75 cents a sack, and still undersell American potatoes by 10 to 15 cents a sack.

Carload after carload has come into Washington. Shiploads have gone to port cities, such as New Orleans, Mobile, Jacksonville and Savannah. Because of the lower shipping charges, these latter shipments undersell American stock 50 cents a sack.

Asked to Modernize

The State Department announcement revealed that the United States has asked the other 26 nations with which it has tariff agreements to modernize the sections dealing with potatoes. If no new agreement is reached the present Canadian imports may turn to a flood next fall.

In addition to the goal set by the Agriculture Department, Congress this week passed a measure to put teeth in the law calling for a reduction in domestic potato acreage.

Agriculture Secretary Charles F. Brannan took up the matter of reducing imports with the Canadian government in Ottawa recently, while attending the International Wheat Committee there.

Canadian officials, it is reported, told Brannan that the matter was one that would have to be negotiated in conjunction with provincial authorities. Most of the Canadian imports come from the Province of New Brunswick, adjoining Maine.

Americans consumed only 108 pounds of potatoes apiece last year according to the Bureau of Agricultural Economics. This represents a steady decline in per capita consumption since 1910, when the average person ate 195 pounds.

However, BAE figures indicate that prices had a strong influence in the change. In 1910 the 195 pounds cost only 25.5 cents. Last year, under price supports, the 108 pounds cost 88 cents.

Average production of potatoes per acre has increased from 109 bushels in 1929 to 212 last year.

Parks Group Opposes Shop Area Spread

Denial of three applications seeking extension of the shopping area at Piney Branch rd. and Flower ave., Silver Spring, has been recommended by the Maryland-National Capital Park and Planning Commission.

The commission also recommended denial of a petition for apartment zoning on the 71-acre Tempo Farm asked by Andrew M. Saul. The property is bounded by Rock Creek Park, Parkwood, Chevy Chase View and Larchmont Knolls subdivisions. The development would not be in harmony with the single family dwelling nature of the neighborhood, the commission held.

The applications now go to the county council for final action.

The Silver Spring zoning petitions were requested by Donald D. Lamond, agent for Roy D. Rife, owner; Joseph F. and Teresa F. Anastasi, owners, and William P. and Emma P. Gordon, owners.

The commission contended that the changes would not be in accord with the master zoning plan.

The commission approved 11 other applications for rezoning.

Sen. Butler Listed Erroneously in Story

The Washington Post Saturday reported that five Republican Senators who had voted against the cotton-peanut acreage bill Thursday were absent Friday when the final vote was taken. In addition to the five names, however, the name of Senator Hugh Butler (R., Nebr.) was listed in error.

Senator Butler was present, and voted against the measure. The Post regrets the error.

6 Nominated for Montgomery Board of Education Post

The names of seven Montgomery County citizens have been filed with the county's first nominating convention for recommendation for appointment to the Board of Education.

The convention will meet Monday night to select five persons for recommendation to Governor William Preston Lane, jr. The one board seat will become vacant May 1.

Meanwhile a panel of convention officials will discuss the convention's operation on WGAY today at 1:15 p. m.

Panel Participants

Making up the panel will be John A. McIntire, chairman of the planning conference; Mrs. Arthur J. Tufts, secretary; Laurence M. Shea, ways and means chairman, and George M. Hawkins, public relations commitee.

The convention will meet at Leland Junior High School, Bethesda, at 7 p. m., Monday.

Persons whose nominations have been filed are: Nathan R. Gilbert of Chevy Chase, past president of the County Council of P-TAs; Mrs. Ben B. Baylor, jr., of Bethesda, P-TA council vice president; Dr. Webster Sewell of Norbeck, physician who is active in the Negro P-TA Council; Frank A. Tyler, jr., of Rockville, past president of the Rockville P-TA; George E. Muth of Westgate, past president of the Westmoreland Hills Citizens Association, Earl L. Williams of Gaithersburg, past vice president of the P-TA Council, and Mrs. John Scharf, of Bethesda, former Washington teacher and now chairman of the local government research group of the League of Women Voters.

Nominations may be made by participating organizations until tonight, and will be considered from the floor of the convention.

The Federal Diary
by Jerry Kluttz

Government Experts Differ on Meaning Of Annual Leave Rider

The rider now before the House to restrict accumulation of annual leave has Government experts at sixes and sevens. It's hard to find two persons who agree on its possible effect.

For example, it's argued that the rider is absolutely meaningless: that it would have no effect whatsoever to prevent the accumulation of leave this year for these two reasons: (1) the law that permits leave accumulation would still be in effect, and (2) the rider would be in effect only through this calender year.

On the other hand, you can find legal lights who argue the provision would be permanent legislation, and they cite instances of other riders to appropriation bills that have been ruled to be lasting changes in laws even though they aren't repeated in future money bills.

Whether the rider would be subject to a point of order and stricken from the bill is another subject being hotly debated. It was generally assumed the rider could be killed by a single House member objecting to it as legislation on an appropriation bill.

But there are parliamentary experts who contend the rider can't be killed by a point of order and their arguments are hard to answer. They say that the rider's defenders will argue that it clearly "demonstrates economy"; and that the House rules allow restrictions to money bills under such circumstances.

Also, it's reported, the rider in its final form was drafted by Chairman Cannon of the House Appropriations Committee. Cannon is the author of the House rules, and he's the most skillful parliamentarian in Congress. He'd be a tough opponent in any floor battle over the rider.

It's clearly possible that the Speaker, in ruling on an expected point of order, could clear up the argument over whether the rider would be temporary or permanent. Under the House rules, it's more difficult to get approval of legislative riders that would become permanent law.

On this one point there is general agreement of officials in the executive branch—that the leave plan would cost more than it would save. In the first place, there are serious doubts if the rider would save a nickel. Unless the rider is either continued year after year or ruled to be permanent, it would be meaningless.

But no matter how the rider is handled, on either a temporary or permanent basis, a new system of leave records would have to be set up for the two million Federal workers. And what a costly job that would be.

The entire system of computing leave and the handling of leave records would be complicated and made more cumbersome. It would take more time of more people to maintain leave records. One official explained:

"If the rider becomes law, we might have to go through our leave records and set up separate leave cards for each of our employes for the 1950 calendar year. It would be a gigantic and costly project for our tens of thousands of employes."

If that's true, then the rider, instead of being an economy measure, could turn out to be an extravagant piece of legislation that would produce more red tape and paperwork.

Another official predicted that the rider, if enacted, would provoke a long series of decisions by both the comptroller general and the Federal courts.

All this means that the members who were responsible for the rider failed to think through its possible consequences. To put it bluntly, the rider is no way to handle the leave problem, as it would confuse instead of clarify the issue.

There's some talk on Capitol Hill of withdrawing the rider if the Administration will agree to restrict the accumulation of annual leave by order from agency heads. If leave accumulation must be restricted, that would be the way to do it.

Any Administration plan would be flexible to allow the accumulation of leave for those employes who are forbidden all the leave as they earn it. It couldn't force employes to lose leave they didn't take unless the law is changed.

But that brings up this question—why prohibit all employes from accumulating leave? The proposal is patently unfair to the new employe or the worker who has accumulated only a minor amount. On the other hand, there are thousands of employes who have from 60 to 95 days accumulated and the House rider doesn't hurt them a bit.

An employe, say, at the Veterans Administration who has only a few days of leave to his credit and who may be laid off in the big reduction there would be a fool not to accumulate all the leave he could. Furthermore, he should have the opportunity to do so in order to soften the expected lay-off blow.

If the Congress wants to crack down on accumulated leave then it should give Federal workers either (1) unemployment compensation protection, or (2) severance pay, or both.

Private employes are way ahead of Government people on those two scores.

Closer Ties Sought for Home, School

Principal Collins Says Organization Needed to Give Aid To Puzzled Youths

A District high school principal said yesterday some organization is needed here that will make for closer ties between the home and the high school child.

John Paul Collins, principal of Eastern High School, said he believes there is such a need because "we find that when children are in trouble, they are coming to the schools for help rather than the home."

Collins gave his views in a panel discussion on the child's needs and how they are met in this area, held at American University as part of an informal preparatory conference for the Midcentury White House Conference on Children and Youth, to be held here the week of December 3.

The agency he believes is needed would use all methods of communication to impress on parents that their responsibilities do not end when their son or daughter goes to high school, Collins said.

The average parent erroneously assumes that the child in high school has reached some stage of maturity where he or she needs advice less than previously, the school head declared.

On the contrary, he said, "if there is a time when young people need their parents and a church influence most, it is when they are in high school."

Discussing recreation needs, Joseph Mitchell, Region E. Director for the District Recreation Department, said the old sections of the city are beginning to suffer, being neglected in favor of new areas.

Night lights are greatly needed for our playgrounds, Mitchell said, even with daylight-saving time in the summer season.

"You may say youngsters should be home before 9:30 or 10, but the fact is, they aren't home and we're going to have to provide recreation for them," he said.

More teachers and materials were cited as needs of local schools by Mrs. Rosalie Lewis of the District Negro elementary schools. Mrs. Alice Sheldon, director of school attendance, said more school time is lost here from parental indifference and illness than from truancy. Lack of foster homes, described as one of Washington's great problems, and lack of trained personnel, were cited by Mrs. Alma Cohn of the Jewish Social Service Agency.

The panel discussion was moderated by Hugh Smith, principal of Jefferson Junior High School. The sessions at American University were initiated by the American Federation of Teachers (AFL). Similar conferences were held in other sections of the country.

Public Hearing Set on Liquor Price-Fixing

Sharp differences within the local liquor industry are expected to break out at a Capitol Hill public hearing Monday on a liquor fair practices bill.

The hearing will begin at 10 a. m. before a House District Subcommittee, headed by Representative Oren Harris (D., Ark.).

The pending measure, sponsored by Representative John L. McMillan (D., S. C.), would voluntarily fix prices on standard brands and would, in effect, crack down on cut-rate liquor stores.

The large liquor dealers are said to favor the bill. In the past, the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board and the Corporation Counsel's Office have opposed in principle similar suggested bills.

Monday will be District Day in the House, but Chariman McMillan of the local affairs committee said he will not call up any bills. Only two measures, one to require physicians practicing here to be American citizens and one to extend sale of liquor to 2 a. m. Sundays, are on the House calendar. There is strong opposition to both bills.

Easter Seal Sale Campaign Lags, Society Reports

Fewer than one-eighth of those to whom seals were sent in the fund drive sponsored by the District Society for Crippled Children have made returns, it was announced yesterday.

Answers were received from 25,000 of 220,000 persons thus solicited.

A good showing was made by the Government unit headed by Edward F. Bartlett which turned in $25,000. With the end of the drive two weeks off, about $63,000 of the $100,000 minimum goal has been achieved.

Man Seriously Hurt; Woman Injured, Driver Held on Drunk Charge

Ivanho Sabinsky, 52, of 9 5th st. se., was in serious condition at Casualty Hospital last night after being struck by an automobile in the 400 block of E. Capitol st.

The hospital said he suffered a brain concussion and possible skull fracture. Police listed the driver as Mrs. Geneva M. Hull, 61, of 4780 N. 25th st., Arlington, Va. The accident occurred at 9:50 a. m.

Another pedestrian, Mrs. Florence S. Matthews, 52, of 1811 1st st. nw., was struck by a car at 1:15 p. m. in the 2500 block of Sheridan rd. se. She is in fair condition at Freedmen's Hospital with a fractured right leg.

Police charged the driver, Robert C. Reinhart, 30, a Veterans' Administration clerk, of Upper Marlboro, Md., with driving while drunk. He was freed in $500 bond pending appearance in Municipal Court Monday.

A young Mount Rainier husband and his wife were injured seriously at 3:45 a. m. when their car struck the rear of a large truck that had stopped for a traffic light on the Baltimore blvd. in Laurel, Md.

The couple, Algie L. Outlaw, 26, and Mrs. Alberta Outlaw, 24, of 4006 35th st., Mount Rainier, were taken to University Hospital in Baltimore for treatment of internal injuries, cuts, bruises and fractured ribs. Outlaw was charged with reckless driving by Officers Jack Larrimore and Joseph Fitzhugh of the Laurel town police.

District Man Wins AF Wings In Las Vegas

Bailey Pendergrass, jr., 22, son of Mrs. Lillian Pendergrass of 623 13th st. ne., and the late Bailey Pendergrass, will receive his wings as a U. S. Air Force pilot Wednesday at Las Vegas (Nev.) Air Base.

Pendergrass

A native of Washington and a 1944 graduate of Armstrong High School, Pendergrass enlisted in the Army's 555th Parachute Infantry Battalion at Fort Bragg, N. C., after special Army training at Howard University. He made 48 jumps at Fort Bragg, where he was stationed until last year.

Entering pilot training through competitive examination, he received basic pilot instruction at Randolph Field, Tex., and advanced training at Las Vegas.

Mrs. Pendergrass, a clerk with the Maritime Commission here, will attend her son's graduation Wednesday.

Murder Charged In Knife Death Of Northeast Man

Joseph B. Atchison, jr., 19, of 5207 Nye st., Deanwood Park, Md., yesterday was held without bond on a murder charge following the fatal knifing of A. C. Bradley, 32, of 1514 Trinidad ave. ne., last Friday.

Bradley was stabbed 11 times with a switchblade knife during a fight at Eastern ave. and Lee st. ne. He was pronounced dead at the scene by a Gallinger Hospital physician.

Atchison was ordered held without bond pending a coroner's inquest when he appeared before Municipal Judge Armond Scott yesterday.

Film Starts Zither Yen In D. C. Area

By Richard Morris
Post Reporter

What's happening in the zither market here shouldn't happen to a guitar salesman.

As they say in the French quarter of Vienna, zither zalez in ze Diztrict haz zoomed since ze arrival of "Ze Zird Man" on ze local zcreen.

As they say on melody lane around 13th and G sts. nw., where you could buy a zither for a song until a week ago, a Z-string is hard to find.

It all started with the appearance of a movie called "The Third Man," which stars Orzon Wellez and others. The background music of the show, which is laid in Vienna, is furnished by a zealous zither player from an Austrian cafe.

Our Richard L. Coe called it "a mesmerizing mystery yarn about a man who didn't seem to be there but was."

He was talking about the "third man." What tantalized the audience as much as anything was the fourth man, who also "didn't seem to be there but was." He's the zither player.

At any rate, one of Washington's larger music dealers said he's had at least 100 calls from curious zither-information seekers.

Another says he never carried zithers, since they went out of style before 1900, but has ordered "plenty of them" since so many would-be strummers have seen the picture.

The third man—music man, that is—said he's had "lots of calls" for zithers, has sold several, still has an "authentic German zither" in the house, but has ordered several more.

Somewhat out of tune with the majority was a fourth dealer, who said he merely carried "zither music with instructions." He thinks the public was fascinated by what "just happened to be a weird instrument."

Still another, who said he has sold "many new zither strings," described the craze as "just one particular 'kick'" that has caught the public's fancy.

On 7 Children

Aureomycin Used to Cure Peritonitis

Little Judith Leight, 3½ years old, had a happy smile for everybody at Children's Hospital yesterday.

She didn't particularly know why the photographer singled her out, but she did know she was feeling well.

How was she to know she was the seventh successive child at the hospital to recover so rapidly from peritonitis through the use of the new antibiotic, aureomycin?

She, like the six patients before her, had suffered the dangerous infection following rupture of her appendix. Previously, such cases were treated with relatively older drugs, pencillin, sulfadiazine and streptomycin. Doctors used all three because of the variety of bacteria encountered in peritonitis.

A year ago, Children's Hospital doctors began clinical use of aureomycin for such infections. They figured that the new drug attacked such a wider range of germs that it might be the single drug needed for peritonitis.

Yesterday, with "Judy" Leight as one of their proofs, they reported that the new drug does the job alone, and in a period of about one week. This is a marked decrease over the illness period of prepenicillin days (when the infection's death rate ranged from 20 to 7 percent) and "some" decrease over the illness period of penicillin and its adjunct drugs.

Peritonitis is the once death-dealing infection hazard which follows bursting of the appendix. Diagnosis of appendicitis before the organ's rupture in infants and children is difficult, and often such perforation has occurred before the diagnosis is established.

But "Judy" wasn't much concerned with medical proceedings yesterday. She was more interested in her dolly, all done up in plaster casts.

Her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Ira Leight, live at 316 Ashby st., Alexandria, Va.

$15,000 Fire Hits Local Law Office

Damage estimated at $15,000 was caused by a fire of undetermined origin on the second floor of the Southern Building, 15th and H sts. nw., yesterday afternoon.

The one-alarm blaze destroyed the furnishings of two rooms of a 7-room suite occupied by the law firm of Cleary, Gottlieb, Friendly & Cox, located on the second floor. Other rooms and the Southern Drug Co., located underneath suffered water and smoke damage.

The fire sent smoke billowing out over 15th st. and forced the evacuation of the drug store and the offices on the second floor. Elevator service continued throughout the half-hour in which the blaze was fought and many upper floor tenants stayed on.

Hugh B. Cox, partner of the law firm, was standing in the hall corridor about 2 p. m. with Eugene O'Dunne, jr., an attorney who has offices on the same floor. O'Dunne, spotting smoke pouring out of the Cox suite, asked, "Is it your suite?"

Cox took a look and shouted, "Yes," running toward the offices. Heavy smoke forced him to retreat, however.

O'Dunne estimated the damages at $15,000.

Cox's firm represents the French Purchasing Commission and has offices in New York and Paris.

Cox said he had been working in the offices during the morning with other members of the firm. He had returned from lunch when the smoke was noticed.

Capt. C. W. Donohue, commanding No. 23 Engine Co., had a cinder removed from his right eye after fighting the blaze. He was treated at the Episcopal Eye and Throat Hospital and discharged.

Plans for Huge D. C. Stadium Are Released

Bladensburg Road Project Mapped To Back Location Of S. Capitol Span

The District Highway Department has developed plans for a huge national stadium in Northeast Washington on the grounds of the National Training School for Boys, it was learned yesterday.

The plans were mapped to strengthen the Commissioners' argument that a new bridge should be erected across the Anacostia River at E. Capitol st.

The National Capital Park & Planning Commission has long planned a stadium and sports center in the E. Capitol st. area, behind the National Guard Armory, and has contended a bridge there would interfere with its plans. The NCPPC advocates the new bridge be built at Massachusetts ave.

The plans call for a stadium on the 158-acre tract of land at the National Training School for Boys. It could seat 80,000 for such an event as the Army-Navy football game, 110,000 for a boxing match, or 125,000 for a mass meeting.

To prevent it from becoming a white elephant, highway planners put in the four corners of the rectangular structure a swimming pool, gymnasium, auditorium seating 6000, and a theater holding 3000. Under the bowl-like stands would be bowling alleys, skating rinks, restaurants, etc.

Big Parking Space

Parking facilities at the stadium would hold 14,000 cars. Proposed railroad layover facilities, conveniently located 1500 feet away, could bring 18,000 persons by train. Five existing or proposed arterial roads pass the site, assuring "rapid and uninterrupted movement of vehicles . . ."

The roads referred to are South Dakota ave., Bladensburg rd., the Annapolis Freeway, Washington-Baltimore Parkway and Fort Drive. The school is at Bladensburg rd. and South Dakota ave. ne.

Highway officials estimated the project might cost 18 million dollars.

Highway Department officials emphasized that the plans were not developed so the stadium could be built by the District. Congressional authority would be required to release the training school land owned by the Federal Government and funds provided either by Act of Congress or private enterprise would be necessary.

Backed Into Project

The Highway Department backed into the stadium-planning work last fall to buttress their case for a bridge across the Anacostia River at East Capitol st.

Anticipating attacks on the East Capitol st. bridge as preventing construction of the stadium talked of there, highway officials looked around for another site.

They agreed on the training school area, and made elaborate plans and exhibits for use at discussions on the bridge site. But they never used them. That particular argument didn't come up.

Now that the bridge hearings are over, the Highway Department has decided to release the results of its efforts for public consideration.

Last week a House District subcommittee approved a bill fixing the proposed Anacostia bridge at E. Capitol st. as urged by the Commissioners.

Made Available

Said Deputy Highway Director Samuel R. Harrison: "We're not in the stadium business. But it's a good study and a good location. We think it should be made available for consideration."

The Commissioners have not indorsed the plan, but after looking it over last week, they declared it "interesting and valuable" and sent a copy to National Capital Park and Planning Commission.

Harrison said the site was selected (1) because it was known the Bureau of Prisons wants to move the school to the Midwest, (2) because of pleasant surroundings and (3) because of a convenient tie-in with the Washington-Baltimore pkwy.

When the parkway reaches Washington, he said, it will require nearly one million cubic yards of fill dirt to build the District approach. It would go past the proposed stadium.

To build the stadium, he said, it would be necessary to excavate 3½ million yards of earth. More than 2½ million yards would be needed for fill at the stadium site. The rest could be used for the parkway. Harrison said it would cost up to $2 a yard to haul in fill for the parkway from some outside source.

In Housebreaking

Checks Found In Trash; Pair Held

Two former convicts, now held in jail here on housebreaking charges, will be more careful of their trash in the future.

They are Robert James Judd, 28, of 906 Maryland ave. ne., and Ernest White, jr., 37, of 705 4th st. nw.

Judd White

Detectives specially assigned to the robbery squad went to a rooming house in the 900 block of 8th st. nw., yesterday to check on the two. The detectives had learned they were there.

While in the room, they looked in a wastebasketand spotted a number of travelers' checks, the detectives said. They remembered that $1000 in travelers' checks, as well as $1500 in cash, were taken Thursday night from the safe of the Standard Transfer Co., 4th and Bryant sts. ne.

The checks were retrieved by the detectives; Judd and white were arrested. United States Commissioner C. S. Lawrence held the two in $7500 bond each on housebreaking charges. Police said Judd has a prior conviction for housebreaking and has been arrested for robbery and assault. White, they said, has a record of convictions for grand larceny and robbery, and has served time at Alcatraz.

3 Alert Detetcives Trace Car, Nab Robbery Suspect

Painstaking work by three detective sergeants brought two robbery charges yesterday against Augustine Floyd Lawrence, 26, of 1811 D st. se., a short order cook.

Lawrence

Lawrence surrendered to police late Friday night after he heard detectives were seeking him, but denied any robberies.

However, police said, he was identified as one of two men who participated in two robberies, one on March 12, and one on March 15. U. S. Commissioner Cyril S. Lawrence ordered him held in $30,000 bond, continuing the case to April 4.

The detectives were Nunzio Bonaccorsy, Paul Clarke, and Erwin Crandall of the robbery squad.

On the night of March 15, Martin Silver, 48, a druggist with a store at 5200 Wheeler rd. se., was assaulted just after he had closed his store and robbed of $350 in checks and $38 in cash.

Detectives traced cars from meager descriptions given by witnesses and finally found one borrowed by Lawrence about the time of the robbery.

After Lawrence surrendered, Silver identified him in a lineup, police said. Yesterday morning, a night clerk at the Plaza Hotel, 331 1st st. ne., who was held up and robbed of $100 at the hotel by two men the night of March 12, identified Lawrence as one of the bandits.

Police said Lawrence is now on three years' probation for the robbery and beating of Dr. Walter E. McCawley, on November 18, 1948.

Landlord Charged With Assaulting D. C. Detective

The case of Arthur J. Smith, owner of an apartment house at 1700 15th st. nw., charged with assaulting a Metropolitan detective, yesterday was continued in Municipal Court until next Thursday. Bond was set at $3000.

Smith was arrested Friday night after police said he pointed a shotgun at Second Precinct Detective Elden E. Ernst who had answered a call that Smith was terrorizing tenants.

When Smith failed to drop the shotgun at Ernst's command, the detective, who coaches Coolidge High's rifle team, fired, hitting Smith in the right arm. The latter was treated at Gallinger Hospital.

Truman Plane to Fly Chile's President Here for Visit

A gala welcome is being prepared for President Gonzalez Videla of Chile, when he visits here April 12.

President Truman's plane, The Independence will bring the Chilean chief of state and his party, including his wife Senora Rosa Markmann de Gonzalez-Videla, to this country.

One of the president's two daughters, Senora Silvia Gonzalez de Campos, will accompany him, the other, Rosita, remaining at home.

Plans call for a reception in front of the District Building, Edgar Morris, general chairman of the welcome committee, said yesterday. Ten bands have accepted invitations to take part in the scheduled parade.

Man Who Swung Ax at Officer Jailed for Year and 90 Days

A man who ran amok with an ax, swung it at a policeman, sliced a radio in half and assaulted his wife, yesterday was sentenced to a year and 90 days total.

Calvin Downs, 4119 Hayes st. ne., was arrested last January 3 by Police Pvt. W. G. Grant. Grant went to Downs' home in answer to a call that the latter was beating his wife.

Downs swung an ax at the officer. The latter fired a shot at Downs, but missed.

Municipal Judge George D. Neilson sentenced Downs to 6 months for assaulting his wife, and 90 a menacing manner; six months for assaulting his wife; and 90 days for destroying private property.

Man Who Knocked Out Wife's Tooth Is Jailed

Robert H. Baker, 32, of 819 M st. nw., was accused in Municipal Court yesterday of knocking out one of his wife's teeth.

"I put the tooth back in, Your Honor," Baker pleaded. "I paid for it all.

"Ninety days," said Judge Armond Scott. The sentence is to run concurrently with a similar sentence on charges of threatening his wife.

Frank Buck, Noted Jungle Hunter, Dies

FRANK BUCK 1939
Dies in hospital

Houston, March 25 (AP).—Frank Buck, 66-year-old Texan who gained fame by capturing wild animals throughout the world, died of a long ailment today.

The "Bring 'em Back Alive" animal authority had been ill since being injured in a Chicago taxicab wreck three years ago.

He entered Hermann Hospital about a month ago. A short time earlier he had come here from his San Angelo (Tex.) home for a checkup at the University of Texas M. D. Anderson Hospital for Cancer research, also at the medical center.

The body will be cremated following services Sunday at a Houston funeral home.

His widow, Mrs. Muriel Riley Buck, and a daughter, Barbara, are survivors.

Buck was born March 17, 1884, at Gainesville, Texas.

As a youngster Mr. Buck quit school after the seventh grade and began an outdoors life that included cowpunching, hoboing and wild game expeditions throughout the world.

He had been interested in animals, birds and snakes from boyhood. His mother once spanked him for playing with a 2-foot copperhead and told him "never again let me see you with a snake."

His first expedition was made in 1911 to South America. Later his trips took him to Malaya, India, Borneo, Burma, New Guinea, Siam and Africa.

He made his first big animal catch in Wild West fashion, dropping a lasso over the head of a 28-foot python and using a tree for a snub.

Historic Estate Sold

Fredericksburg, Va., March 25 (AP).—Historic Cleve plantation, 19 miles from here in King Georges County, has been sold by J. Armistead Lewis to W. Harrison Mechling of Mooretown, N. J.

Cleve, one wing of its residence dating back to 1729, once belonged to Charles (King) Carter. It has been in the Lewis family's possession since 1852.

Cornerstone of the four-story wing addition to the Prince Georges General Hospital, first in the county to be aided by Hill-Burton Act funds, was laid yesterday.

Armed with a membership card in the union, handed him by one of the workmen, Representative Lansdale G. Sasscer (D., Md.) troweled cement into the cornerstone as it was swung into place amid the applause of more than 400 onlookers.

Representative Sasscer paid tribute to the efforts of many county residents and officials who aided the campaign to secure the original portion of the hospital.

Decision to make the hospital a county project rather than follow the course of other hospitals adjacent to Washington which were sponsored by nonprofit groups "made up of a few citizens without any particular official status" has been proven a wise course, he said.

Sasscer paid tribute to the Civic Federation; Frank Fierstein, chairman of the federation committee which pioneered the movement; Mrs. Betty Tayman, the first board chairman; the County Commissioners, particularly the late William A. Carson, who served as first president of the board, and Harry W. McNamee, who succeeded Mr. Carson, and other county officials and residents who took part in the operation of the institution.

The program included invocation by the Rev. E. Albert Hughes, pastor of St. James Catholic Church, Mount Rainier; welcome by Superintendent Harry W. Penn, jr.; T. Howard Duckett, who introduced Congressman Sasscer, was presented by W. Waverly Webb, clerk of the County Circuit Court, who was chairman of the committee in charge; recital of the contents of the cornerstone, which included copies of The Washington Post by Miss Christine Hensley, superintendent Harry W. Penn, jr.; T. by the Rev. Robert S. Chamberlain, pastor of the District Heights Presbyterian Church. Tea was served by members of the Hospital Guild in the Nurses' Home.

Hill-Burton funds provided $413,000 of the $1,270,000 cost of the addition, which will furnish 125 more beds and medical, pediatric and surgical facilities for Negroes and contagious diseases for the first time.

George DeVakos, Manager Of Richfield Dairy, Dies

George J. DeVakos, 64, manager of the Richfield Dairy, died of a heart condition Friday night at the George Washington University Hospital, where he had been a patient for three months. He lived at 813 F st. ne.

His wife, Mrs. Katherine DeVakos, is a patient at the same hospital.

A business man here for almost 40 years, Mr. DeVakos was one of the founders of the local chapter of the American-Hellenic Educational and Progressive Association, known as the Order of Ahepa. He was a past secretary and past president.

Born in Sparta, Greece, Mr. DeVakos came to this country at the age of 16 and worked for the Pennsylvania Railroad out of Pittsburgh.

Coming to Washington some 40 years ago, he started a candy manufacturing business here which he conducted for several years. Mr. DeVakos was a life member of Federal Lodge No. 1, F.A.A.M.

Funeral services will be held at 2 p. m. Tuesday at the Church of St. Sophia, 8th and L sts. nw., followed by Masonic funeral rites at Fort Lincoln Cemetery. Friends may call at the Deal funeral home, 816 H st. ne., between 7 and 10 p. m. Monday.

Besides his wife, he is survived by a son, John G. DeVakos, of the F st. ne. address, and a daughter, Mrs. Mary Carres of Broomall, Pa. Another son, Pvt. Victor G. DeVakos, was killed in the war.

Fire Razes Farm Near Harrisonburg

Harrisonburg, Va., March 25 (AP). One of the worst farm fires in recent years in Rockingham County early today destroyed the barn of Lyle M. Armentrout and burned to death more than 40 head of livestock.

Armentrout, who lives at Edom, four miles north of here, estimated the damage at more than $20,000, part of it covered by insurance. Killed in the blaze were 32 head of yearling calves; six horses, including three riding mounts; and three cows.

The tenant, W. C. Frye, and his son, Blake, salvaged an automobile, tractor and some farm machinery from the building, but the flames had gained such headway when they arrived on the scene that they were unable to save any of the livestock.

In addition the livestock and the barn itself, the loss from the blaze included 1000 bales of hay, 200 bushels of corn, 100 bushels of barley and other grain.

Origin of the fire has not been determined. Firemen theorized it could have been a carelessly-tossed cigarette, since the barn and sheds were located beside the highway.

Firemen from Harrisonburg and Rockingham County points battled the blaze for more than three hours before bringing it under control.

Takoma Park Goes to Polls On Tuesday

Takoma Park voters will elect a mayor and seven councilmen Tuesday.

Citizens of the Montgomery-Prince Georges city will also decide in municipal elections whether to provide salaries for the community's governing body.

The ballot contains a referendum on the question of paying the mayor $600 and the councilmen $300 annually in lieu of expenses.

Polls wil open from 7 a. m. to 7 p. m. at the fire house.

Former Councilman

Opposing candidates for mayor are Councilman Ross H. Beville, technical director for WWDC and WWDC-FM, and Joh F. Sidell, sheet metal and roofing contractor. Sidell formerly served as a councilman from 1940 to 1946.

Mayor John C. Post did not file for re-election.

Contests are scheduled for council seats in only two of the city's four voting precincts.

Incumbents Walter H. McClenon and H. Brooks Perring are opposed by Maj. William F. Fischer, former councilman and city engineer for the two seats from the Fourth and Twentieth Precincts. McClenon, completing his first term, is a member of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation. Perring is a real estate dealer.

Two Seats Contested

Three candidates are also contesting for the two seats from the Sixth and Twenty-first Precincts. They are Charles H. Klinck, chief appraiser for the Montgomery County Orphan's Court; James B. Parkhill, chief accountant for the American Floor Products, and Mrs. Philip W. Woods, an active worker in the League of Women Voters and various civic organizations.

Councilman J. H. Nies is unopposed for the sole seat from the Ninth and Twenty-second Precincts. Manager of the Washington Sanitarium, he has served on the council since 1946.

Incumbent Lawrence A. Oosterhous and Ray H. Eccleston, contractor and builder, have no opposition for the Fourth Precinct seats. Oosterhous, a Government economist, was appointed to the council last July.

Would Replace Expenses

The referendum proposal would establish regular salaries for the council to replace the present practice of providing expense allowances.

Council voted to place the salary measure on the ballot at a special meeting held March 18. The question must be decided by citizen vote and it was determined then to place it on the current ballot rather than to postpone action two years.

225 Enrolled In Jr. Nature Training Class

Some 225 youngsters, 9 to 12 years old, gathered in the Interior Department auditorium yesterday to register for the 1950 Junior Naturalist Training Course.

They saw a nature movie "Sharp Eyes" and a movie on conservation and erosion. Raymond Gregg, chief naturalist for National Capital Parks, explained the program, which emphasizes nature appreciation and enjoyment of the out-of-doors.

The outdoor part of the program will get under way this week. The course includes four conducted walks in park areas on Saturday mornings and two bird walks on Wednesday mornings before school.

Group Hits Shelving Of Postmaster Bill

By The Associated Press

The Citizens Committee for the Hoover Report sharply criticized a Senate committee yesterday, accusing it of "unwillingness" to act on a bill intended to eliminate politics from postmaster appointments.

The measure was shelved Tuesday by the Senate Civil Service Committee—"despite a favorable report by its own subcommittee," the Hoover group said.

21 New Highway Plans Disclosed

Richmond, Va., March 25 (AP).—Plans for 21 new highway projects, covering 37 miles of roadway, five new bridges and a major highway-railroad grade separation were announced today by the State Highway Department.

Bids will be opened by the road department on Tuesday, April 18. If satisfactory proposals are received, the department said construction would begin this spring.

The projects include:

Arlington County—Route 237—20 mile of concrete pavement at the intersection of U. S. Route 60, widening the intersection.

Arlington County—Route 237—a double 6x5 foot box culvert west of Glebe rd.

Fairfax County—Route 7—43 mile of four-lane dvidend concrete pavement between the Shirley hwy. and Alexandria, closing a narrow gap between four-lane sections.

22 Fines Levied

Princess Anne Courthouse, Va., March 25 (AP)—The recent crackdown on illegal club operations and numbers rackets, in Princess Anne County including Virginia Beach, has resulted in 22 fines being levied in the Trial Justice Court, totaling $1550.

Nineteen defendants appeared in the court Friday afternoon to answer charges ranging from aiding and abetting in the operation of a nuisance to illegal sales of whisky and possession of gambling devices.

The cases resulted from two raids made by county police and alcoholic beverage control board enforcement officers on February 18 and March 1.

Jobless Payments Up

Norfolk, Va., March 25 (AP)—Unemployment insurance can be considered big business in the Norfolk area with eligible participants receiving a total of $1,037,591 in 1949 to tide them over their jobless periods.

This information came this week from Commissioner John Q. Rhodes, of the Unemployment Compensation Commission of Virginia, who reported simultaneously that $351,113 was paid out during the same year by the UCC office for the Portsmouth area.

Straughan Cites Platform

Newport News, Va., March 25 (AP) Nile Straughan, of Fredericksburg, today outlined the platform on which he will make his bid as the Republican candidate in the special election May 2 in the First Congressional District.

One of the four announced candidates for the unexpired term of the late Representative S. Otis Bland, Straughan said he was in favor of the Hoover Commission report with the exception of the Veterans Administration recommendation calling for VA reorganization.

Straughan said he would work for an immediate increase of the Federal income tax exemptions for individuals from the present $600 to $1200, and an increase in pension benefits.

Miss Greear to Reign

Blacksburg, Va., March 25 (AP).—Miss Martha Greear, V.P.I. student from Riner, has been chosen to reign as "Queen of the Milky Way" at the annual V.P.I. dairy day program May 6.

CONGRATULATIONS—Dr. Warren D. Bowman (right) is congratulated by Charles W. Wampler after being inducted yesterday as the fifth president of Bridgewater College, Bridgewater, Va. Wampler is president of the college's board of trustees Bridgewater, Va., March 25. (AP).—Dr. Warren. D. Bowman was installed formally here today as the fifth president of Bridgewater College with more than 300 distinguished guests in attendance.

Accepting the charge administered by Charles W. Wampler of Harrisonburg, president of the college's board of trustees, Dr. Bowman attributed Bridgewater's growth to four factors—faith, loyalty, love and sacrifice.

"The greatest college is the college with the best teachers," Dr. Bowman said in his inaugural address. Bridgewater College is a Church of the Brethren school.

In the principal address of the ceremonies, Dr. A. J. Brumbaugh declared that "of all the freedoms that we enjoy, four are of prime importance."

Dr. Brumbauh, vice president of the American Council on Education, of Washington, continued:

"They are freedom to think for one's self, freedom to say what one thinks, freedom to choose as judgement dictates, and freedom to act in accordance with one's choice."

Maryland News in Brief

No Purely Local Bill Veto, Lane Says

Annapolis, Md., March 25 (AP).—Governor Lane announced tonight he will treat local bills just like any others.

No legislation will be vetoed just because it is local, he said.

Lane plans to act Tuesday on 106 bills left over from the 1950 General Assembly. Thirty-four of these are of doubtful constitutionality, Attorney General Hall Hammond has ruled.

Courts assert "there is always the presumption that a Legislature acted constitutionally, and that this presumption cannot be nullified by doubt alone," Lane said in a statement.

Fleming a Bit Modest

Baltimore, March 25 (AP).—Sir Alexander Fleming last night ascribed the discovery of penicillin which brought him the 1945 Nobel Peace Prize to "pure luck."

The gray-haired Scotsman told an audience at the Johns Hopkins University School of Hygiene and Public Health the only important part he had played in discovering the powerful, germ-killing drug was that "I noted something."

Walkersville Plans Fete

Frederick, Md., March 25 (Spl.). Walkersville, prosperous farming community 6 miles north of Frederick, today announced preliminary plans for celebration of the 200th anniversary of the town's founding.

Philip H. Beard, general chairman, said a five-day program is being arranged, starting with ceremonies on May 30. During the celebration volunteer firemen of the town will dedicate their new firehouse and community hall.

Procurement Rates Hit

Hagerstown, Md., March 25 (AP). Admiral Dewitt C. Ramsey says the Nation's readiness for emergency expansion for airplane making is being seriously weakened by present aircraft procurement rates for the armed forces.

The retired officer wrote in Pegasus, the publication of Fairchild Engine and Aircraft Corp., that current procurement levels also mean new aviation cutbacks in the near future for the air force and the Navy air arm.

Maryland Fete Held

Baltimore, March 25 (AP).—This was Maryland Day—the 316th so far.

State and city officialdom, used to a holiday on March 25, got one. But it was more like just another Saturday, a day they have off anyway.

The day's principal observance was held at the statue of Cecil Calvert, a founding father, in downtown Baltimore. Senator O'Conor (D., Md.), Mayor Thomas D'Alesandro and members of the Maryland Colonial Society—some 50 ladies strong—took part in the ceremonies.

Maryland Day goes back to 1634. On March 25 in that year the Ark and the Dove dropped anchor in Chesapeake Bay.

Veterans Get $25 Million

Baltimore, March 25 (AP).—Maryland veterans have received an estimated 25 million dollars since the distribution of World War II insurance refunds started January 16.

The Veterans' Administration said about two thirds of the 217,000 Maryland eligibles have received checks.

According to VA calculations, based on average refund checks of $175, a total of $25,316,550 has been paid to 144,666 Maryland veterans.

Man Freed in Home Defense

Baltimore, March 25 (AP)—A man has a right to protect the sanctity of his home with a gun even against the police, a Baltimore magistrate ruled yesterday.

Police Magistrate August A. Kozlovsky dismissed assault charges against 29-year-old James Tattersall who had ordered two policemen from his home at pistol point.

The two officers said they entered Tattersall's home about 3 a. m. to investigate an automobile accident. They said they were let in by Mrs. Tattersall, but she testified that they forced their way in.

They said they woke Tattersall to ask if he had been in an accident. He said he had. They went into the living room to wait for Tattersall to dress, they related, and soon he appeared with a pistol in his hand.

"Get out," he ordered, "and don't come back without a search warrant."

Magistrate Kozlovsky said that although he did not wish to encourage the use of firearms against police, the officers had no right to enter Tattersall's home.

Parole Violator Freed

Annapolis, Md., March 25 (AP).—A 34-year-old man who violated his parole from prison after serving 17 years of a life sentence for murder was free again today.

Governor Lane announced the release of Leroy Tyler along with five other paroles.

At the age of 14 Tyler was convicted of murder by the Anne Arundel County Circuit Court. He was freed in 1947 and later recommitted to the Maryland Penitentiary for parole violation, the Governor's statement said.

Daylight Time Fate May Hinge on Cow

By Bill Brinkley
Post Reporter

In a manner of speaking, the controversy over daylight saving time milks down to the question: Are you anti-cow or pro-cow?

Put another way: Are you one of those people who like to chase a small white ball across a pasture? Or are you one of the world's workers and a non-golfer?

Basically it's the ageless chasm (and who shall bridge it?) between the farmer and the city slicker.

"It won't work," said a farmer friend of ours, hot emotion chasing across his face. "Cows don't read the paper. When the sun reaches that certain place in the sky they want that bran in the bucket, they want that cracked corn. Cows don't carry Elgins."

"DST," said a Government girl, "means I can get in an extra hour of tennis in the summer, an extra hour of sun. The good Lord knows I need it—after being cooped up in that cave of a Pentagon all day."

Said a father: "It means I can see my children before they're put to bed."

Said a mother: "But I have to put them to bed. Did you ever try putting a two-year-old to bed in daylight?"

Said a traveler: "It fouls you up completely. You never know whether it's plus or minus."

Psychiatry, a profession not recognized by some farmers, enlists itself on the side of DST: Mentally and physically, it's more hygienic.

While from the Society of Natives comes the solemn warning: DST can mean more attacks on Government girls and charwomen in those dark morning hours.

DST (not to be confused with DDT) means that the clocks are set ahead an hour, giving everyone, including cows, an extra hour of sunlight at day's end.

Usually it extends from the last Sunday in April to the last Sunday in September.

The District Commissioners have announced a poll to give citizens a chance to say how they feel about DST.

Other Points At Stake

But the welfare of Guernseys is by no means the only point at issue.

The alarming spectre of DST as a threat to Government-girl and charwoman morals was raised by Miss Etta L. Taggert, historian for the Society of Natives and the only woman president it ever had.

"One girl told me she was terribly frightened, having to walk those several blocks in darkness," Miss Taggert reported. "One was grabbed of an early morning. We've got enough of a crime wave as as it is."

Fundamentally, said Miss Taggert, the conflict is one between the poor people and the golfers.

The golfers, she charged selfishly want that hour for chasing that little white ball around those pastures.

But the city's charwomen, she said, oppose DST to the last woman. When she has fought DST in the past, charwomen have called her up to offer thanks.

"Charwomen have to get out in the wee hours of the morning as it is. To make them get up earlier. . . . Of course, golfers. . . . Of course they favor it. They don't know how lonesome it is in the streets in the wee hours."

Miss Taggert has hit to the bone of the situation here.

For it is on professional lines that the citizenry stands divided DST-wide.

For and against DST our own survey shows the battle lines thus drawn in general:

PRO: Government girls, also all other office workers, swimmers, tennis players, golfers, psychiatrists.

CON: Farmers, mail carriers, travelers.

It can hardly be gainsaid, Dr. Winfred Overholser, superintendent of St. Elizabeths Hospital, pointed out, that DST acts to cut down the incidence of nervous breakdowns in Washington. These, along with the crime wave, are a problem.

"Means people can get in an hour's more recreation at the end of the day," he said. "This is hygienic—physically and mentally."

The psychiatrist had heard about the farmers' objections.

"Apparently," he said, "it is some difficulty about 'dew in the grass.'"

"Apparently" is putting it mildly.

'Dew on the Grass'

The "dew on the grass" crisis has to do with the fact hay and other things in which farmers traffic are too wet for proper cutting when the farmers have to get up an hour earlier.

"I can take in twice as much hay between 5 and 6 of God's time than 5 and 6 daylight saving time," said Bruce Derrick, who used to take in quite a bit of hay on his 650-acre Maryland farm.

"How about working on God's schedule?" inquired Derrick.

Derrick is now secretary-treasurer of the Maryland and Virginia Milk Producers Association. The dairymen also prefer God's time.

Mrs. Harvey Wiley, clubwoman, related that when she had a farm in Virginia they had to hale the cows in from pasture an hour earlier so they could be milked for the city-slicker, milk-drinking Washington DST-lovers.

What the non-Elgin-carrying cows thought of this would wreck a Guernsey's cud.

Mrs. Wiley, who, by the way is chairman of the department of legislation for the District Federation of Women's Clubs, recalls a conversation she once overheard:

"One very pretty young girl wanted Daylight Saving Time. And she was asked, 'Couldn't you play tennis Saturday? Why do you have to inconvenience the entire community? Just a few of you people who want to play golf and tennis.'"

But the great majority of Government girls and men, and there are 212,873 of them in the Federal Government here, seem to be all for it.

Beverly Harris, of 4514 Connecticut ave. nw.: "We need that extra hour of daylight. Also, women like to hang their laundry out."

Mrs. Alma Kieny, of Hyattsville, Md.: "DST is a life-saver. I'd cast a hundred votes for it if I could. As for playing tennis weekends, it rains some weekends."

A conflict-torn young cow-lover over at the State Department who asked that she not be quoted (McCarthy, please note), said rather pathetically: "I'm in favor of cows. But also I like to swim. I do like to swim and play tennis."

Some mothers don't like it—can't get their young to go to bed in daylight.

But, averred Mrs. Dean Snyder, of 7 Hunting Cove pl., Belle Haven, who has three children:

"This is outweighed by the fact the children can spend more time with their father, who gets home early enough to take them swimming."

The letter-carriers don't like it. Says Ralph E. Aiken, president Branch 142 of the Letter Carriers Association: "It means more work in the heat of the day."

But, basically, it really is a question of how you feel about cows . . . and how you feel about chasing a white ball across a pasture . . .

It made the world seem more civilized to find, after a long search, one cow-owner who favors DST, a Government girl at that.

She is Mrs. Lina Custer, who works for the Civil Service Commission.

Mrs. Custer, matter of fact, owns 10 cows on her 129-acre farm near Gaithersburg, Md.

"I like DST," she spoke the heresy. "Gives me time to get something done about the farm when I get home."

Then there was the husband who piously gave his reason for favoring DST:

"It gives me time to mow the lawn of a summer evening."

"Subterfuge!" shouted a cow-lover. "He wants to play golf."

Trade Board To Hear Talk

Senator Karl E. Mundt (R., S. D.) will discuss "What Challenges Our Freedom" at a general membership meeting of the Board of Trade at 8 p. m. Tuesday at the Statler Hotel.

C. J. Mack, general chairman for the Cherry Blossom Festival, sponsored by the Board of Trade's Greater National Capital Committee, will outline the schedule for this year's event.

Miss Claudia Pinza, coloratura soprano of the Metropolitan Opera and daughter of Ezio Pinza, star of "South Pacific," will sing. Her appearance is sponsored by the National Capital Sesquicentennial Commission. Plans for the Sesquicentennial will be discussed by Paul Massman, recently appointed director.

Arlington Board Backs Plan to Install 17 Traffic Lights at School Crossings

The Arlington County Board yesterday approved a plan to install 17 new traffic lights at school crossings.

The proposal is designed to free nine policemen, now assigned to intersections, for cruising duty. Some officers now cover several of the crossings.

The board deferred a vote on the $20,000 appropriation necessary for the lights, however, pending a report on surplus funds available in the current county budget.

The plan was recommended by a three-man committee—County Manager A. T. Lundberg, School Superintendent William Early and Police Chief Harry L. Woodyard.

The cruising officers would set the school crossing lights in operation just before and after school hours. The lights would not function at other times.

The committee told the board it discarded two alternative solutions because they would involve an annual operating expense rather than a single capital outlay.

The affected crossings are:

Lee hwy. and N. Lexington sts.; Lee hwy. and N. Culpeper st.; Washington blvd. and Patrick Henry dr.; 16th and N. Glebe rd.; Wilson blvd. and N. Edison; Key blvd. and N. Vietch st.; Carlyn Spring rd. and S. 2d st.; Henderson rd. and George Mason dr.; Highland st. and Pershing dr.; Columbia pike and S. Wakefield st.; Glebe rd. and S. 7th st.; S. Fillmore st. and 8th st.; 16th and S. Quincy; 34th and S. Utah; 33d and S. Stafford; Seminary rd. and Center Theater; 23d and S. Grant.

In other actions yesterday the board:

Enlarged its 7-member planning commission to 10, with 3 ex-officio members. It appointed Bertram Gross, executive secretary of the President's Council of Economic Advisors, and Frank Morgan, Arlington attorney, to fill the voting vacancies; shifted Planning Engineer C. L. Kinnier from a voting to a non-voting member; and added School Supt. Early as a third ex-officio member.

Passed an ordinance, aimed chiefly at contractors, prohibiting the littering of county streets and sidewalks, with a penalty of $5 to $50 for violation.

Denied a use permit to the American Telephone and Telegraph Co. for construction of a 350-foot tower in the 1900 block of N. Harrison st.

140,000 Enumerators Begin Mass Count Next Saturday

"Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers, counting the whole number of persons in each State . . ."

"The actual enumeration shall be made within three years after the first meeting of the Congress of the United States, and within every subsequent term of 10 years, in such manner as they shall by law direct."

—Constitution of the United States

By Chalmers M. Roberts

Post Reporter

NEXT Saturday, April 1, 1950, in every corner of the land, an army of 140,000 enumerators will begin the mammoth job of canvassing the Nation for the seventeenth decennial census. Saturday is "E-Day"—E for enumeration.

The prime purpose will be to fulfill the constitutional provisions quoted above—to find out how many members each of the 48 States will have in the House when the Eighty-third Congress meets in January, 1954. The Congress to be elected this November will be based on the present apportionment of the 435 House seats because the new census figures won't be ready until some weeks after the election.

But the census takers will make far more than the mere head count necessary to fulfill a constitutional requirement. They will come up with raw material eventually to be translated into some 50 fat volumes of statistics about the United States—everything from the number and location of homes lacking bathtubs to how many Americans never got beyond the third grade and how many houses have mortgages.

The decennial census in 1950 is a population and housing census. The housing part was added by act of Congress in 1940.

Based on Compromise

THE FACT that the Constitution calls for a head count every 10 years comes straight from the compromise at the Constitutional Convention in 1787 which set up the Nation. In the battle between the big and the little States among the original 13, it was finally agreed that each State would have two Senators but that Representatives in Congress would be based on population, with each State having at least one House member.

The first census in 1790 was conducted by the 17 United States marshals and 600 assistants. They had no blank forms but used notebooks or whatever scraps of paper came to hand.

Jefferson in 1800 suggested that the second census collect additional facts "presenting a more detailed view of the inhabitants . . ." Ever since, census officials have been deluged with ideas for questions to ask the public. Favorites among proposed—but so far rejected—questions are on cat and dog population, stamp collectors and such queries as: Have you made your will? Do you owe any money? Do you have a piano? Do you vote? If not, why not? Are you blonde, brunette or redhead? Do you believe in God?

The United States marshals continued the head counting job until the 1880 census, when the first supervisors of the census were appointed. First printed forms were used in 1830. By 1840 the census-takers were collecting data on agriculture, mining, and fisheries as well as population.

The 1950 census is supposd to count every American as of 12:01 a. m. on Saturday, April 1. If you have a baby after that, he won't count. If you die before that, you won't count, but if you die after that date but before the census taker gets around, you will be counted.

A Two-Week Sprint

THE BULK of the job is enumerating the Nation's urban areas, and this is expected to be done in about two weeks—April 1 to 15. It will take most of April to make the farm count.

For the big count, the United States is divided into 14 areas. Washington is in Area Four, comprising Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina and the District of Columbia.

Each area is further subdivided into districts—37 of them in this area. Down to this level, most of the census bosses are regulars. Below them, practically everybody is hired for the one big push.

The Nation's 450 district supervisors have 8300 crew leaders and 140,000 enumerators under their direction. The enumerator is the one who comes to your door with a big brown envelope under his arm.

7 Cents a Head

THE bulk of the enumerators are women. How many are political appointees is hard to say, but Congressmen have been doing their best to get the temporary jobs for their constituents. Because of current good times, many of the women who take the jobs are doing so to make some extra money for the family—or for spring clothes.

An enumerator working in the urban areas will be paid on a piece basis—in this area, 7 cents a head counted, 7 cents a house, and so on. Census figures they'll average about $8 a day for 10 or 12 days, nice extra change but hardly princely pay.

To count heads in Metropolitan Washington will take 1238 enumerators and 64 crew leaders.

All in all, the Nation-wide job (the offshore Territories will be counted, too) will cost about 90 million dollars. But, says Census, the result will be some 15 billion facts, which makes the cost only about three fifths of a cent per fact.

What Uncle Sam Wants to Know

HERE, as the enumerator is likely to ask them, are the questions to be put to Americans in the 1950 census.

EVERYBODY will be asked:

1. What is your name?
2. What is your address?
3. Are you the head of the household or his wife, daughter, son, mother-in-law, lodger, maid, etc.?
4. What is your race?
5. What is your sex?
6. How old are you?
7. Are you married, widowed, divorced, separated or never married?
8. Where were you born?
9. Are you a citizen? If so, by birth or naturalization?

EVERY person 14 or older will be asked:

1. What were you doing last week—working, looking for a job, temporarily absent from a job, working at home, permanently unable to work?
2. If you worked, how many hours last week?

Dr. Roy V. Peel, new director of the Census Bureau

3. What kind of work did you do?
4. In what kind of business or industry did you work? For a private employer, for Government, your own business, etc.?

EVERY fifth person will be asked:

1. Where were you living a year ago?
2. Where were your parents born?
3. What is the highest grade of school you have attended?
4. Did you finish that grade?
5. Have you attended school at any time since February 1, 1950?

EVERY fifth person 14 or older will be asked:

1. If looking for work, for how many weeks?
2. If looking for work, how many weeks did you work last year?
3. In 1949, how much money did you earn working for wages or salary?
4. In 1949, how much money did you earn working in your own business, professional practice or farm?
5. In 1949, how much money did you receive from interest, dividends, veteran's allowances, pensions, rents and other income?
6. If you're the head of the house, how much money did your relatives in the household receive as wages-salary, own business, other incomes?
7. If you're a male, did you serve in World War I or II or any other time, including present service?

EVERY thirtieth person 14 or older will be asked:

1. If you worked last year but not last week or weren't looking for work last week, what kind of job did you last have? In what kind of business or industry?
2. If you were ever married have you been married more than once?
3. How long have you been married? (or widowed, divorced or separated)?
4. If you're a woman, how many children have you had?

IN ADDITION to the above questions, the census takers will collect information about every dwelling and every farm.

Census Is Expected to Show Record Gain of 19 Million

LINCOLN once said that "If we could first know where we are and whither we are tending, we could better tell what to do and how to do it."

The 1950 census is designed to tell us "where we are" and "whither we are tending." The Census Bureau has some pretty definite ideas of what the count is going to show. For example:

1 The total population will be almost 151 million, up 19 million since 1940, the biggest increase in any decade in American history.

Incidentally, there are some red faces at Census over a paragraph in a 1943 census booklet. It quoted figures to show how the rate of population growth had been slowing down ever since 1880, and added: "Authorities estimate that by about 1980 our population will have stopped altogether, at a peak of around 153 million." Now they're saying the population leveling off may not come until the early decades of the twenty-first century, when it will be over 165 million.

2 The biggest population gains are in the Far West—Oregon, Washington, California, Arizona and Utah. The wonder of them all will be California. In 1940 the Golden Bear State ranked fifth in the Nation, with just under 7 million inhabitants. Now it will rank second only to New York, with more than 10½ million. The shift will give 10 or 11 new House seats to the three Coast States. Florida is the only other State with a 20 percent or greater gain.

3 There are more married couples and the young couples are having more children than usual. The war and the postwar prosperity have brought some 3½ million more marriages than were expected by the long-term census estimators—and about a million more divorces, too. The number of children under 5 has risen phenomenally, causing the Nation's school boards to lay awake nights.

4 The long-term decline in the farm population is continuing. From 1940 to 1945 there was a slump from 30½ million to just over 25 million. The war losses have partially been made up, but the trend is unmistakable.

5 A major change in the past decade has been the shift in the Nation's Negro population. Once largely rural, the Negro has been leaving the farm by the thousands. The 1950 census is expected to show a drop of about a third in Negro farm families, and a 50 percent rise in the number of Negroes outside the South.

6 The changing status of women, with its effect on the Nation's homes, will be shown by the great increase in the number of working wives. Census believes that some 5 million additional women took jobs outside the household in the past decade. These working wives now outnumber the single women workers.

7 The long-term trend toward a larger proportion of older people in the Nation is continuing. From 1900 to 1940, the proportion of those 65 or older rose from 4.1 percent to 6.8 percent. The estimate for 1950 is about 7.6 percent.

Translated into number of persons, the 1950 census should show there now are about 11 1/3 million among us who are 65 or over. The new figures are certain to reinforce the pension movement.

8 We are more and more a Nation of city dwellers. The chart, "Growth of the United States Population," prepared by the Census Bureau, gives what is considered a rather accurate estimate of the total population today at 151 million. But the part shown as urban—about 83 million—is merely an estimate of the population which today lives in the areas classified as urban 10 years ago.

Actually, the urban population figure which finally emerges is likely to approach 100 million. This is partly because of a new definition of urban.

In 1940, urban was defined as incorporated places of 2500 persons or more. The absurdity of such a definition is apparent when you realize that Silver Spring and Bethesda, Md., as unincorporated areas, would continue to be classified as rural.

For 1950, Census will lay out limits to the urban areas of every city which had 50,000 or more in 1940. These limits include the fringe of urban territory around the city, ignoring political boundaries but conforming to the pattern of settlement.

All local census officials are empowered to make public, probably in May or June of this year, the provisional population counts for cities and counties. Thus Washington will know its new population rank among the Nation's big cities by midyear. By July 4, Census says, we should know the provisional figure for the Washington Metropolitan Area.

These figures will be subject to correction, partially because of figures on transients. April 11 will be "T-Night," when every transient in hotel, train, motel or wherever he may be will be interviewed. Then each will be assigned to his home town, a lengthy statistical job. College students, for the first time, will count as of their college homes instead of the family residence.

By next December 1 the final figures will be ready for computing the new House membership. The whole 1950 census is due to be wound up not later than December 31, 1952.

Pope Pius XII—Priest and Statesman

A Cardinalate Instead of a Diocese

Kees Van Hoek, a native of The Hague and now an Irish citizen, has been a correspondent in London, Geneva and the United States. His first biography of Pius XII appeared in 1939. After much research and a private audience with the Pope last fall, Van Hoek has written in "Pope Pius XII—Priest and Statesman," a full and vivid description of the man and his career from a delicate boy in Rome to supreme ruler of the Roman Catholic world. The biography is presented by The Washington Post during the present Holy Year in 24 daily installments.

Chapter VIII—
Triumphs and Sorrows

FEW know of the reluctance of Eugenio Pacelli in accepting the cardinalate.

His friend, Cardinal von Faulhaber, Archbishop of Munich, had told him about a convent in Switzerland, "Stella Maris," on the Rorschacherberg. There, between the mountains, the lake and the forests, he had gone for his annual holiday since 1917. He delighted in long walks, so that the children began to know him and hailed him in their local dialect with a sunny, "Greeting, Father." They used to flock to him for confession, which he loved to take on Saturday evenings to relieve the "other" curates of the local parish church.

On a long walk during one of these Swiss holidays a telegram was delivered to him. "Fervidamente," it said cryptically—"Heartiest congratulations."

"Do you understand that?" asked the Nuncio, handing the telegram to his walking companion. When the latter suggested that the cardinalate, about which rumors had already begun to appear in the press, must have materialized, Pacelli was so amazed that he lapsed into his native tongue. "Non posso capire"—"I cannot understand it. I have begged the Pope so insistently to put me in charge of a diocese." That same evening he left for Rome to try and change the Pope's mind. It was of no avail.

What precisely is the Secretary of State? He is, so to speak, the Pope's Prime Minister-cum-Foreign Secretary. There is in the Vatican Archives a letter in which Sixtus V enumerates the qualities which a Secretary of State needs. "He must know everything, have read everything, understand everything, but he must say nothing."

A Fluent Linguist

PACELLI, indeed, has an encyclopedic knowledge. He speaks eight languages fluently. Generally, those who are supposed to speak many languages have a vocabulary as limited as that of a hotel porter. But Cardinal Pacelli, addressing an international press conference in Rome, spoke for more than an hour in seven langauges: Italian, French, English, German, Portuguese, Spanish and Latin.

He spoke without a written note before him, without any hesitancy, without any searching for words, swinging easily from one language into another, his soft voice vibrant with the intensity of what he desired to impart.

He has always been a magnificent preacher; as an orator his secret is that he says the truth with force, but also with grace. He gives every sermon the careful preparation of an artist, but he remains natural, disdains pathos. His speeches are built up with the logic on which Romans pride themselves. He electrifies his hearers by his personality, his appearance and his eloquent gesticulations. The listener senses the preacher's own burning conviction.

He spoke with equal eloquence in the Berlin Sport Palast, in the Cathedral of Lisieux and before the Parliament of Rio de Janeiro. His German "Gesammelle Reden" are as magnificent as is the "Triptique" of sermons which he delivered in France.

Clarified Concordat

HIS BURDENS increased as his fame spread. A month after his appointment as Secretary of State came his nomination as Archbishop of St. Peter's, virtually that of dean of the great cathedral. Later he became also Camerlengo, which brings with it the temporary headship of the church during a vacancy of the papal throne.

The office of Secretary of State remained all-important. His searching mind was set to work first of all on an agreement interpreting certain regulations of the Italian Concordat with the Holy See, which had followed the Lateran Treaty, restricting some of the latest misunderstandings inherent in the church's relation with an absolute state not yet sure of its own ideology.

When later the Fascist regime demanded the disbandment of Catholic Action, the Pope issued an encyclical on the matter. Realizing that through a censorship of press telegrams and other "delays" Mussolini might checkmate the encyclical before it could reach the public, Pacelli entrusted a young American monsignor working at the State Department, Francis Spellman, now Cardinal-Archbishop of New York, to fly an advance copy from the Vatican to Paris, to release it there to the news agencies and press correspondents. Thus it burst upon the Fascist government as a total surprise.

At the Grotto of Lourdes in 1935, when the then Cardinal Pacelli represented Pope Pius XI as special legate at a solemn triduum

PACELLI set to work to conclude further concordats — among others, one with Austria. There were triumphs, such as the return to the fold of official France. The church's "eldest daughter" had long been estranged from the paternal house. But with a papal diplomacy which actively supported a positive international peace policy, common ground was soon reached.

Relations grew stronger and more cordial. At the end of the Holy Year 1935, commemorating the nineteenth century of the Redemption, the Pope sent Pacelli to represent him as his special legate at a solemn triduum at the Grotto of Lourdes. But even more important politically was Cardinal Pacelli's mission to Lisieux, in the summer of 1937, to consecrate the Basilica of St. Theresa, the young Carmelite nun who died at the age of 24 to become the mediator of modern needs.

France received him with royal honors. The Premier and the members of his Popular Front cabinet were at the Gare de Lyon in Paris to await him. The Republican Guard presented arms and played the Papal Hymn.

But for his weak old age, it was announced, the Pope himself would have gone; now he had appointed "his closest collaborator," whose sermons at Lisieux and in the Paris Church of Our Lady of Victories were of pentecostal eloquence.

Holland Shows Few Scars; Her Injuries Are Internal

By Frank Gervasi
Post Reporter

THE HAGUE—After wandering about Europe for a year, war ruins become routine stuff. You are surprised when you do not find them. You get your biggest surprise in Holland.

The country looks, at first glance, exactly as you left it 10 years ago almost to the day. Amsterdam, the capital and industrial heart, seems as sturdy as ever. The Hague, Holland's seat of government, appears more active. The flat countryside, with its steeply roofed houses and squat, dawdling windmills, retains its faintly unreal postcard patina.

When you wake up on your first morning in the Wittebrug Hotel in The Hague, you feel for a crazy few minutes that perhaps the dreadful decade between 1940 and 1950 never happened at all. The tailcoated waiter heightens the illusion when he brings in breakfast. He lugs a tray loaded with two oranges, five kinds of bread and two of jam, sliced cheese and ham, pats of butter as big as half dollars, hot milk and fragrant, potable coffee.

That was the kind of breakfast you had back in March, 1940, two months before Holland's skies rained Nazi parachutists and fire and HE bombs drenched Rotterdam. But you soon learn that only tourists, visiting firemen, correspondents and such eat breakfasts like that.

Plain Dutchmen, once among the best fed people in all Europe, are living on potatoes and cabbages, for the most part. They are lucky to afford meat twice a week.

Gaping Square Mile

YOU SEE Rotterdam and you realize how badly Holland was hurt by the war. The Germans came on May 10, ruined Rotterdam on May 14, and accepted the Dutch surrender on May 15. The occupation lasted five years, and the Germans damaged the country more when leaving it than when they entered, but Rotterdam remains one of their masterworks of destruction.

The central part of the great port city looks as though a huge vacuum cleaner had sucked up the buildings that were there, leaving an irregular square mile of emptiness. About 25,000 homes, 60 schools and scores of office and apartment buildings stood on those now desolate acres surrounding the scaffolded shell of the Groote Kerk.

New apartment buildings are under way—throughout Holland you can tell where the bombs fell not by ruins but by the new buildings erected or rising on the spot—and the railway bridge that leaps the Maas River and hurdles Rotterdam's canals has been rebuilt.

Reconstruction is more plainly visible along the docks. Rotterdam is again one of the world's great ports. The Nazis blew up more than 200,000 square yards of dockside sheds, and most of these have been rebuilt. The Dutch did not need to rebuild Rotterdam's 26 floating grain elevators. They had dismantled and hidden them before the Germans came.

Rotterdam's reconstruction was accomplished with the help of about $1,500,000 worth of steel mill products bought in the United States with Marshall Plan dollars. Nearly 400 million dollars worth of ECA goods has entered Holland through the restored port.

A Tidy People

IT IS a common fallacy that Holland emerged from World War II with a relatively undamaged economic, social and political system. Actually, Holland was hurt much more than one is led to realize by external appearances. The Dutch are a tidy people and have cleaned up war's vomit more rapidly than most others.

It is true that they have full employment and that rationing has been lifted from everything except coal and coffee. But wages are low, and prices, in spite of controls, are high. Housing is critically short, with approximately a third of the 10 million population living doubled or tripled in crowded quarters.

Look at Holland through a fluoroscope and you will see internal injuries directly or indirectly attributable to the war.

Such an examination bears out the realistic appraisal of the Dutch situation in an official ECA report which begins:

"World War II destroyed the economic stability which the Netherlands had succeeded in maintaining for 30 years."

An Outlet Closed

SUCH an examination discloses, for instance, that the war sank about half of Holland's dollar-earning merchant fleet, slashed its food export trade by about a third, wrecked Holland's principal suppliers and customers like Britain and Germany, cut heavily into coal production and dropped the country's all-round agricultural and industrial productivity to a dangerously low level.

The loss of Holland's Indonesian empire, a source of dollar-making raw materials and an outlet for Dutch emigration—Holland is only half again the size of thickly settled Massachusetts, but has more than twice the population of the Bay State—was one of the indirect results of War II.

Many of the freedom-loving Dutch were glad to see the Indonesians achieve independence, but they are rubbing their chins now and wondering how they will be able to absorb into their economy some 80,000 returning troops.

They are also wondering where young Jan and Dirk will make careers. Presumably there will be places in Indonesian agriculture, industry and mining for Dutch careerists, but the number required will be small. The old Dutch colonial civil service is shot to pieces and the pieces have been taken over by the Indonesians themselves.

Should projected economic union between Holland and Indonesia restore the old trade relationships, then financially the loss of the empire will not seriously affect Holland's future. But if the Indonesians peddle their raw materials wherever they can get the best prices, Holland will have a harder time getting back on its feet by 1952—or 1962, for that matter.

It Needs Germany

DUTCH officials readily admit that what progress Holland has made toward recovery has been possible only with the substantial help of American taxpayers. But they also say that whether Holland will be able to "go it alone" depends on how well the rest of Europe recovers.

But if the Dutch don't achieve what the economists call "viability" by 1952, it won't be for lack of trying. With characteristic patience and industry, they are reclaiming thousands of acres of land from the Zuider Zee, expanding their industries and working out new trade agreements with their neighbors.

The most important of these is Benelux, an economic union with Belgium and Luxembourg which is a test tube for the broader experiment in European integration being urged by Paul Hoffman and Averell Harriman. Benelux is expected to come into full being by the end of June. If it works, it may encourage the rest of Western Europe to move a bit faster toward economic union.

No Elbow Room

BELGIUM'S biggest long-range problem, however, is overpopulation. Ask any Dutchman, particularly in the young-man-in-search-of-a-future age bracket, and he will tell you what is his country's most urgent present and future problem and what he wants to do about it:

"This little country of ours is getting so crowded that if you play a concertina too vigorously you're apt to knock down your neighbor. When we had an empire, we didn't feel crowded and didn't feel so small. Personally, I'm planning to leave when I get the chance. Where do I want to go? Oh, America, maybe, or Australia or Africa . . ."

Holland has added 1,850,000 to its population since 1938, and this sudden increase in population not even the most casual observer can fail to see wherever he goes. What the visitor cannot see are the problems gestating as a result of the overpopulation.

A COUNTRY FULL OF MILK, FULL OF HONEY . . AND PEOPLE . . . From the Elseviers' Weekblad, Holland's largest weekly

Holland, evenly divided between Catholics and Protestants, is involved in a "production problem" of another kind. Protestants and Catholics are competing to produce as many children as possible, each group determined that the other shall not become the dominant majority.

But that is an old Dutch rivalry and, as the saying goes, another story.

Civil Defense Rivals Unite in Demand for Atom Raid Data

By John G. Norris
Post Reporter

WE ARE lagging in preparations for the civil defense of our cities against atomic attack.

This is the conclusion of most of the military men, Congressmen, Government officials and plain citizens who are familiar with the problem.

While agreeing on this, they are in dispute on what to do about it. Some want to launch an immediate national program. Others caution against such abrupt action. They see any sudden step as a two-edged sword.

Here's what the critics are urging:

1. Release of much more official information on means of combating atomic attack. Without this, everyone seems to agree, intensive local action would be worse than useless.

2. A top-level national assertion that some degree of civil defense preparation is necessary. While almost everyone agrees that control of civil defense should rest in the States and local communities, several State Legislatures actually have defeated bills to set up civil defense plans, largely on the ground that the Federal Government has given no clear declaration that such action is essential.

(This general lethargy — in sharp contrast to the worry of officials and citizens who have studied the matter — was evidenced last week as the Joint Congressional Committee on Atomic Energy opened public hearings on the question. The group borrowed the large Senate Caucus Room in anticipation that an audience would be attracted. Only a handful of spectators appeared.)

(3) An expanded and improved "national civil defense headquarters," with less diffusion of effort. At present, the National Security Resources Board is charged with civil defense planning, but farms out its work to a dozen Federal agencies Not more than 12 NSRB officials are assigned to this work.

(4) Advancement of whatever agency is set up as "national civil defense headquarters" to "operational" rather than mere "planning" status. Under a directive issued by President Truman last March, the NSRB was told to confine itself to planning.

WHILE most critics of our present civil defense planning agree on the above four points, they disagree on their timing.

Some of the witnesses at last week's hearings demanded instant, all-out national action. Some American Legion spokesmen and private citizens took this view. Others felt that the Federal Government should only stimulate a "grass roots" reaction by carefully feeding out information about the dangers of atomic attack, and wait for the demand for national action to come from the local communities.

They believe that immediate establishment of a national civil defense organization would be interpreted by the people as an indication that war is near, and the stability of the Nation would be upset. Then, in time, the tension would pass and the whole program would become a joke. Furthermore, they believe such action would be interpreted abroad as a warlike act.

Both groups, however, agree on the necessity for release of official and as exact as possible information on such points as these:

What damage may be expected from an atomic bomb and other new weapons?

How much time have we before an attack is likely?

How deep or strong must air raid shelters be?

What do we have to do about our local police, firemen, hospitals, waterworks, power, food storage? Should they be increased, or dispersed, or standby facilities created?

What about foreign ships in the harbors of port cities?

Is dispersal of industry essential?

What manpower controls can we expect in an emergency? Will there be National Service legislation?

Agencies in Clear

NOT all of these questions can be answered publicly, and some not at all prior to war. Information on some of them already has been sent to the States by the NSRB— though only recently and for guidance alone.

In fact, no criticism can be fairly directed at NSRB officials. What neglect there has been is the result of top-level limiting orders.

NSRB and other agency men have carried civil defense planning well forward. The Public Health Service has well-developed plans for such an emergency. The Atomic Energy Commission, at NSRB urging, has made a start in the training of radiological detection teams and the familiarization of doctors with treatment of atomic injuries. The Air Force is recruiting and training civilian aircraft spotters.

But far more is needed. For example, nothing has been done to train even key men in such jobs—almost unknown in peacetime—as the rescue of persons trapped in wrecked buildings. Britain has three national schools teaching such rescue work. They build typical British towns and then demolish them. Students must burrow into the collapsed structures with 2-foot evacuation pipes.

Standard Alerts

OUR States need such things as these:

A standard operating procedure (SOP) for air raid alerts, and what to do about traffic, city lights, etc., thereafter. New York and Jersey City, obviously, should not have different blasts for "red" and "all clear." Such SOP, say advocates of action, should be written into State laws in peacetime on a standby status.

Authoritative information on what the average man should do in case of an air raid. There are a number of highly important "little" do's and don'ts that can save lives in an atomic attack.

Such information, indicating that the Government is on top of the situation, would create confidence and help "condition" the people against panic, which many authorities consider one of our chief dangers.

Ultimate Possibilities

THE critics who fear that creation of a national civil defense system would make the people think that war is near, raise some fundamental questions:

Is there any defense against atomic attacks on cities?

Can we parry any such assault, or even alleviate it, without either (1) costly spending that will bankrupt us and wreck our form of government; or (2) adopting controls that will destroy democracy and end in dictatorship?

Are not the effects of the A-bomb and particularly the H-bomb so terrific that the practical things that can be done in civil defense are not worth doing?

Therefore, can the Government start talking about civil defense without disclosing these dismal prospects?

It is true that really effective measures would include the wholesale dispersal of key industries. The 10-year cost of this is estimated at 250 billion dollars. Entirely "ready" civil defense forces should include standby hospitals, doctors, firemen, police, etc., stationed on the outskirts of our cities, and the cost of maintaining these auxiliary services and facilities would be colossal.

An Atomic Energy Commission study estimates that the "ideal" care of one victim of A-bomb burns would require 42 tanks of oxygen, 2.7 miles of gauze, 36 pints of blood plasma and 40 pints of whole blood. Some 250,000 pints of whole blood would be required for the 40,000 to 50,000 casualties expected from a Nagasaki-type bomb over a three-week period.

Question of Salvage

SUCH information as this—not yet fully known to the people—is behind the "what's the use" attitude of some officials toward civil defense.

But there is another side.

The dread H-bomb has not been built yet, and such an authority as Dr. Robert A. Millikan, one of the men responsible for the A-bomb, publicly doubted last week whether it would ever be perfected.

The atomic bomb is horrible, but several of them would be required to destroy a city the size of Washington. Shouldn't we make plans to save the lives of those not under the zero point—by protection, treatment and counsel?

Will the facts panic the American people? Dr. Walter S. Cronin, Cambridge, Mass., disaster coordinator, told the Congressional Atomic Committee that it would not create fear.

"The fear is there," he said. "You're not going to frighten the people by putting in a civil defense program. You'll reassure them."

Extra Hours Without Pay

'Overtime' Now Soviet Mainstay

By Edwin D. Gritz
Post Reporter

BEHIND RUSSIA'S amazing production reports is an untold story of payless, extra toil by millions of citizens to keep Soviet programs from bogging down.

No calculation of Soviet economic power can be complete without consideration of these endless work hours. This, of course, is in addition to the Soviet Union's measureless prison camp labor and its many production speed-up movements.

Soviet and non-Soviet information indicates that men and women in all walks of life and of all ages are repeatedly mobilized into "volunteer" work brigades for special projects. They are brought into line by "appeals" which often imply severe consequences for unenthusiastic "volunteers."

No Skill Needed

THE USE of such extra labor became standard practice after the war when Soviet leaders discovered that production programs were moving faster in some fields than others, creating serious unbalance. For instance, the construction of new power plants was superflouous when the surrounding cities and countryside were unprepared to use the electricity.

Thus volunteer brigades were organized for general reconstruction and other work requiring a vast amount of labor rather than technical skills—such as highway repairs, dam building, power line setting and housing.

Volunteer corps made possible such industrial centers beyond the Urals as Magnitogorsk, city of steel and iron; Krasnoturinsk, aluminum center, and Miass, strong contender to the Stalin (ZIS) Auto Works in Moscow.

14 Million Hours

THEN there is the story of Alexandra Cherkasova, "an ordinary Soviet woman" who organized a brigade of women to help restore some of Stalingrad's noted buildings. Then, according to an indirect Soviet account, many other brigades were formed by people who "gave their free time after their day's work."

"And now there are 4000 of them, embracing more than 90,000 workers, engineers, artists, scientists and housewives. They have already put in 14 million man-hours on the building jobs of their native city and rendered invaluable assistance to the professional builders."

Throughout Russia there are political-economic projects such as that of the Echmiadzin in Armenia. Kremlin-inspired brigades have helped repatriated Armenians to make this barren district livable and even thriving. Within recent months, says one report, 1000 new houses have been built by special effort, while other brigades have tilled land, raised schools and so on.

Project for Kids

POSSIBLY the most dramatic venture within the Soviet orbit is the construction of Dimitrovgrad in Bulgaria. For five years now, the Bulgarian Communist Party has made it practically mandatory for every Bulgarian youth to "volunteer" at least two months of the summer vacation for work on the city, shrine to the late Premier Georgi Dimitrov.

With much publicity, young men and women have been designated socialist "brigadiers" with the privilege of wearing identifying blue shirts and blue berets. So far, 600,000 school-age boys and girls have been mobilized for this project.

Dimitrov called this venture "a model page from the socialist chronicles of Bulgaria." Outside sources say it has also been made into Bulgaria's outstanding indoctrination school. After work hours and even at lunch time, Marxist ideology is hammered into the youthful workers.

Spud Surplus New Challenge to Crop 'Magicians'

By John Gerrity

Mr. Gerrity is a Senior Editor of Pathfinder Magazine

A FEW DAYS before last January 1 this year, when forecasts for the second half of the twentieth century were being concocted, British Writer Aldous Huxley added his mite to the awful brew. Half sorrowfully, half hopefully, he predicted:

"During the next 50 years mankind will face three great problems: the problem of avoiding war; the problem of feeding and clothing a population . . . which, by 2000 A. D., will have grown to upward of three billions, and the problem of supplying these billions without ruining the planet's irreplaceable resources.

"Food crops will be cultivated on the land now devoted to cotton, flax, hemp and jute, and, since wool will no longer be used, huge flocks of sheep will be greatly diminished . . . Landlocked inlets, lakes, ponds and swamps will be scientifically farmed."

And, added Huxley, "while eating will still be regarded as a pleasure," most of the food will be vat-raised or built up by industrial synthesis.

Professional Potpourri

NEXT WEDNESDAY, at the Statler Hotel, a little-known group of men who can erase much of the gloom from Huxley's forecasts, and bring to fruition much of its hopefulness, will meet for the fifteenth time since 1935.

They call themselves the National Farm Chemurgic Council. They come from every corner of the country and from every walk of life—farmers, lawyers, newspapermen, school teachers, industrialists, preachers and scientists. They have one common interest.

It is chemurgy—technically, the putting of chemistry and allied sciences to work, finding industrial uses for farm products.

These chemurgists are not magicians, but they come as close to practicing magic as the law allows. Because of their research and work, it is as easy today to make an automobile door from common beans as it is to make bean soup. Once, to drive Doubting Thomases to the wall, an NFCC chemist made a silk purse out of sows' ears. It can be seen today—clasp and all—in the laboratories of Arthur D. Little, Inc., of Cambridge, Mass.

But bean-doors and sows'-ears purses are currently window dressing. The average Washingtonian who eats oatmeal for breakfast would lift an eyebrow if he were told that airplanes "eat oats," that his lawnmower will be sharpened with oats this spring, that his car is generously sprinkled with oats or, even more incredible, that when he drives to Rockville, Md., he could be riding on oats.

But it's true.

A Protean Product

AFTER 10 years of research, a Chicago chemist, Carl S. Miner, who had been given the run of the waste piles of the Quaker Oats Co., found he could convert oat hulls into furfural, a substance similar to alcohol.

A solvent, taken in small doses, furfural will rid an airplane engine of gum deposits left by burning oil. An insulator, it protects the tiny abrasives which cover a modern grindstone. An adhesive, furfural can be used to hold together the surface of a macadam road.

And if that isn't enough, it can be mixed with carbolic acid to form a resinous substance which can be shaped into babies' bottles, steering wheels or crash helmets for jet plane pilots—most of whom probably think chemurgy is a strange tropical disease.

There is nothing tropical about the roots of chemurgy. Actually, its birthplace was Chicago. There, in 1924, Julius Barnes, then president of the United States Chamber of Commerce, was making a speech. A wheat exporter by trade, Barnes was deploring the sorry state of American agriculture.

The Nation, he said, was going to pot. Wheat was piling up in warehouses. There were more potatoes lying around than could ever be used. Corn bins everywhere were overflowing. The world could never eat, moaned Barnes, the vast food surpluses which were an aftermath of the war's excessive demands. To clinch his arguments, he ad-libbed a sentence:

"Unfortunately, the human stomach is not elastic."

That was the beginning of chemurgy. Covering the Barnes speech for a magazine, Farm and Fireside, was a young reporter, Wheeler McMillen. McMillen played with the inelastic stomach idea for a while.

If the world couldn't eat what it produced, he reasoned, maybe it could wear it, sleep in it, sit on it or play with it. As the idea grew, he talked to former President Herbert Hoover and to the late Henry Ford, and got the late Thomas A. Edison, who even then was trying to make rubber out of ragweed, to applaud it.

For seven years McMillen's idea alternately thrived and withered—but it never died. In January, 1935, here in the Cosmos Club, he and a friend, Dr. William J. Hale, a chemical consultant to the Dow Chemical Co., found an angel—an Irish angel named Francis Patrick Garvan, president of the Chemical Foundation.

They formed a nonprofit organization. They fought like dogs over its name and finally settled on the one they use today. (McMillen agreed to the word "chemurgic" mainly because it could be fitted into a one-column newspaper head.) And with Dr. Karl T. Compton, Irenee duPont the late Col. Frank Knox, Ford and others acting as midwives, the baby was born near the Ford plant at Dearborn, Mich.

Two years later the infant was insolvent. Garvan was dead. The NFCC owed $20,000. Even the office rent was overdue. Yet eight years later, enough farmers, scientists and others with faith in chemurgy—and $25 each—managed to restore the NFCC to robust health.

Science in Uniform

MEANWHILE, chemurgy had gone to war with the rest of the Nation. Thousands of parachutes and 60 percent of the clothes women were wearing were being made from wood. Rayon, they called it. Soybeans were being converted into ersatz leather. And new miracle drugs, like penicillin and streptomycin, largely chemurgic offshoots of the Nation's distilling business, had moved from clinical labs to sick-bays overseas.

Oil was being made out of corn. Chemurgy speeded the way to synthetic rubber. Fusol oil, another byproduct of whisky, was going into explosives. And at home the chemurgists were helping the Agriculture Department find ways to make an acre of land produce more than it had ever done before.

This Wednesday as McMillen (he's fatter now, but he still fondles a weed as if he were sure it might turn into a diamond stickpin) pounds the president's gavel to open the fifteenth annual meeting of the NFCC, two major challenges will face the chemurgists:

1. What can they do to answer the question millions are asking daily: "What the hell are we going to do with 75 million surplus bushels of potatoes, 190 million pounds of surplus dried milk or 52 million pounds of surplus eggs?"

2. What can they do to further President Truman's Point IV program for the revival of underdeveloped areas of the world?

Succeeded With Corn

SO FAR as potatoes are concerned, the chemurgists don't profess to know the answer, or part of the answer, now. But they are working on it. Once they helped solve a corn surplus by making a new cloth from corn called vicara (many a Washington summer suit will contain vicara this year). They are sure that the same patience and efforts will produce a new use for the lowly spuds.

As new demands arise for plastics, perhaps present and future stocks of dried milk can be absorbed. Milk is convertible to lactic acid. Lactic acid is an ingredient of plastics.

So far as the President's Point IV program is concerned, the chemurgists have been at work for more than a year. They have determined that the nations likely to be involved in such a program can send to the United States 131 different agricultural products. Now they are at work seeking industrial uses for those products.

Here then is a partial dispellant for Aldous Huxley's gloom—and a partial guarantee that his optimism is not baseless. Even if the forests do vanish and the lakes become farms, life in 2000 A. D. is bound to be fuller.

One chemurgist has gone so far as to say that "a single soybean may soon prove so important and useful that the atomic bomb will appear to be only a hideous relic of some primitive age."

Democrats About Ready to Rake in GOP's Red Chips

GALLERY GLIMPSES

By Robert C. Albright

Post Reporter

DEMOCRATS who've been jittery for a month over charges of Communist infiltration in the State Department last week began to relax.

For the first time since Senator Joseph R. McCarthy (R., Wis.) hurled the first of his allegations, they are speaking up publicly in defense of the department and Secretary Acheson himself.

If McCarthy's "Case of the Top Spy" proves a dud, look out for the Democrats to take the political offensive in an organized series of speeches designed to "set the record straight." Last week they experimented with a few trial shots.

For weeks even Administration regulars remained in their bomb shelters, fearful that McCarthy had touched off a time blast that could ruin them politically.

When his "Case No. 1" against Judge Dorothy Kenyon exploded, they took a deep breath.

When the case against Ambassador-at-Large Philip C. Jessup kicked back on McCarthy, they began to take some soundings.

They say they found out that public "suspicions" fanned by the initial fusillade are subsiding with each day of "no proof."

Only Needs One Homer

THEY are not underrating the seriousness of the charges or the fact that McCarthy needs only to turn up one genuine Red in the State Department to score politically.

But the least optimistic of the Democrats are now persuaded that the Republicans have no more ammunition than they had when they plunged full tilt into the abortive Pearl Harbor investigation.

Most of them see a chance to make Democratic political capital on the boomerang.

They are still divided, however, on just how to do it. Some Democrats maintain that "the investigation itself is our best defense." These argue that the day-to-day disclosures, or lack of them, are all the defense Acheson and his department need.

Others say McCarthy's charges will stand or fall on whether he proves his "top spy" case now before an investigating subcommittee. They are ready to let fly if he doesn't.

A week ago, hardly a Democrat at the Capitol would say that much. So far as the nervous Democratic majority was concerned, Secretary Acheson was pretty much on his own.

Even when the President spoke out from Key West in warm defense of his Secretary of State, declaring he had done his job "admirably," no echo came back from the Hill.

It took collapse of the case against Jessup and the first signs of an organized Republican campaign against Acheson to bring them out of the storm cellar.

Wherry Pulled Trigger

IN LINCOLN, Nebr., Senator Kenneth S. Wherry (R., Nebr.) called Acheson a "bad security risk." On the same platform, GOP National Chairman Guy George Gabrielson recalled that Acheson had said some kind things about Alger Hiss. Previously it had been only Senator McCarthy speaking. Now prominent Republicans were backing him up.

If anything was needed to unite the Democrats, that did it.

Next day a "freshman" Democrat, up for reelection this fall, broke the thick coat of Senate ice.

Making his maiden speech, Senator William Benton (D., Conn.), the only member of the Senate, incidentally, who has ever served in the State Department, praised Acheson's "gifted leadership."

Said Benton:

"Harrying and tormenting Dean Acheson until he quits his great post is not the way to cure the problems of the department. You certainly do not cure a man's headache by cutting off his head."

Another freshman, New York's Senator Herbert H. Lehman, congratulated Benton, praised Acheson's "intelligence, courage, resourcefulness and high patriotism."

Some GOP Desertions

NEXT day, two more Democrats came out slugging against Senator McCarthy.

Ohio's Stephen M. Young told the House that no official of the department is either a subversive or a spy, called McCarthy a "rabble rouser."

In Manchester, N. H., Senator Warren R. Magnuson (D., Wash.), also up for reelection, said McCarthy had done "a distinct disservice to his country . . . probably caused great joy in Russia."

A few Republicans led by Senator Ralph E. Flanders (R., Vt.) started "disassociating" themselves from any effort to get rid of Acheson.

If McCarthy fails to make his case against a "top spy" in the department, it may be the GOP's turn for the jitters. Certainly the Democrats plan to rub it in.

Anderson's Close Call

NEW MEXICO'S Clinton Anderson, chairman of the Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee, tackles the McCarthy charges from a slightly different angle.

In a broadcast to New Mexico released today, Anderson tells his constituents what a narrow escape he had from "guilt by association."

Some 15 years ago he was invited to join an organization called "the League of the Foreign Born." The idea of the group was to enlist first or second generation Americans for the purpose of showing by example to the peoples overseas how well the American democracy works.

Anderson's father was born in Sweden and he was much impressed. He thought he would become a sponsor of the organization to show friends in Sweden "how America had enriched our lives."

For some reason Anderson never filled in the necessary forms. Years passed and he never joined. Then one day while a member of a special congressional subcommittee reviewing charges brought by the House Dies Committee, he received the shock of his life.

"You can appreciate my feelings when I say that among the organizations listed as subversive was the League for the Foreign Born," relates Anderson.

"Membership in that organization, no matter when the membership was taken out, was regarded as proof that the individual was guilty by association, namely, that he belonged to an organization which subsequently became a Communist front organization."

Anderson, who has fought communism all his life, said the Senate right now is "being treated to an exhibition of that sort of thing."

"You can see that if my name had happened to be on that list of sponsors, there would have been people who would forever after have been able to charge that I was a member of a questionable organization and would bear watching."

Still Betting on Dewey

SENATE REPUBLICANS have added New York to their list of prospective Senate seat "pickups" in November. They've done it on more than a hunch that Gov. Thomas E. Dewey will run for reelection and will carry the Senate seat with him.

Cloakroom gossip is that Gen. William J. (Wild Bill) Donovan will be Dewey's choice for the Senate spot on the Republican ticket.

Republicans need a seven-seat gain to take over control of the Senate in 1951.

Senator Owen Brewster (R., Me.), chairman of the Republican Senatorial Campaign Committee, now claims they have a "better than even" chance for six new seats and a 50-50 shot at three others.

The Illinois seat of Senate Democratic Leader Scott W. Lucas tops his GOP scalp list. Another Democratic Leader, Senate Whip Francis Myers of Pennsylvania, has the doubtful distinction of being next in the preferred line of Republican fire.

But where is that seventh seat coming from?

Maybe California, Utah or Washington State, says the GOP campaign chairman.

Actually, says Brewster, the mathemeticians are wrong—Republicans don't need seven seats for Senate control.

"We've got it now, with only 44 Senators," he quipped.

* * * *

SENATOR ANDERSON, the Democratic senatorial campaign chairman, isn't as pessimistic as you would suppose about the GOP's arithmetic.

He insists the Democrats will hold every Senate seat they now have, make some gains in Republican territory.

Anderson also has a "little list." It checkmarks Republican seats in these States: Indiana, Colorado, Iowa, Wisconsin, South Dakota and Missouri.

Theological Dispute

OKLAHOMA'S Robert Kerr and Illinois' Paul Douglas were heatedly debating the Kerr natural gas bill, exempting local gas producers from Federal regulation.

Kerr contended one of Douglas' arguments against the bill was actually an argument for it. Technically, he said, it made Douglas "a joint author of the bill."

"God deliver us from that!" said Douglas.

"I am sure that He will, to our mutual gratification," replied Kerr.

Demurred Douglas: "I should like to be with the Lord, and I should like to be with the junior Senator from Oklahoma, but not on this particular question."

'81' Reds Thinned Down to a Nebulous Few

By Alfred Friendly

Post Reporter

THE events that have unrolled in the six weeks since Senator McCarthy (R., Wis.) first said there were 57 Communists in the State Department, strongly suggest—to put it very mildly indeed—that the good Senator was exaggerating.

Those events also suggest that when he made the charge he did not have a good case against any of the alleged 57, that he still has not worked up a case against them and, finally, that what he did, instead, was to take a running board jump to some remarkably dubious conclusions.

In public sessions of the Tydings Subcommittee of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, McCarthy has not leveled the flat charge of Communist membership or Communist Party loyalty at any one person employed by the State Department this year.

In those public sessions, in fact, he has marshalled evidence against only one or possibly three of the persons involved in the "81 cases" he outlined earlier (on February 20) on the Senate floor. The other persons he talked about in public session by name were not included in the 81 cases.

Recording Unavailable

LET'S go back, first of all, and see just what he did say, when he first made the charges. Curiously, this turns out to be more difficult than one might suppose.

In the first place, there appears to be no text of his first speech on the subject, in Wheeling, W. Va., on February 9. McCarthy had dictated some notes, but says he did not speak from them textually. A recording of the address was made, but McCarthy said that he recently asked for it and found it was not available.

The Wheeling Intelligencer, however, quoted him next day as having said:

"While I cannot take the time to name all of the men in the State Department who have been named as members of the Communist Party and as members of a spy ring, I have here in my hand a list of 205 that were known to the Secretary of State as being members of the Communist Party and who nevertheless are still working and shaping the policy of the State Department."

If this in fact was what he said, he amended it quickly. Two days later, he spoke in Reno, Nev. According to the Nevada State Journal:

"Senator McCarthy, who had first typed a total of 205 employes of the State Department who could be considered disloyal to the United States and pro-Communists, scratched out that number and mentioned only '57 card-carrying members' whom Acheson should know as well as members of Congress."

Firm Residue of 57

IN ANY event, it seems fair to take the speech he read into the Record, his other remarks on the Senate floor that night, and a telegram that he sent to President Truman as the true texts of what McCarthy said and meant.

In his telegram to the President, McCarthy said, "I have in my possession the names of 57 Communists who are in the State Department at present."

Subsequently, in his speech, McCarthy referred at least six times to "57 Communists (now) in the State Department." And he quoted himself as saying in his Reno speech, "I have in my hand 57 cases of individuals who would appear to be either card-carrying members or certainly loyal to the Communist Party, but who nevertheless are still helping to shape our foreign policy."

The puzzling question is: Where are McCarthy's cases against them?

The Senator has told this reporter that all 57 were included in the 81 cases that he outlined in his speech of February 20. If so, they are hard to find.

Pinpointed a Handful

IN about half a dozen cases, McCarthy, giving his own appraisal, flatly called the person concerned a Communist. In about a dozen more cases, he read summaries of matter in the individual's file saying that one or another informant or document says the person is a Communist, or believes him to be, or alleges that he is.

But in all the other cases, the outline of the evidence McCarthy read states only that the individual had friends, relatives or associates who are, or are believed to be Communists, or that he had contacts, roommates or pals who are Communists or Soviet espionage agents.

Granted that these may be grave accusations and suspicious circumstances, those phrases in themselves are not allegations that the person is himself an active Communist, or loyal to the Communist cause.

If McCarthy had further information from which he could say the individual was a Communist, he did not adduce it on the Senate floor. Nor, according to Senator Tydings, has he passed the information on to the subcommittee. Last Monday he simply gave Tydings the names that key in with the 81 case outlines.

Few Direct Links

ONE would have supposed that when he began his public presentation of charges before the Tydings Subcommittee, set up to hear them, McCarthy would have proceeded at once with the instances of those 57 solid Communists now in the State Department. But he did not. Most of the people he talked about are not in the State Department or are only remotely connected with it. And he did not even charge most of them with being Communists.

His first case was that of Miss Dorothy Kenyon, formerly a United States representative on a United Nations commission but whose official duties ceased as of last January 1. The charge was that she was connected with more than 28 organizations branded by various Federal, State or municipal investigating agencies as subversive. Miss Kenyon's defense against this charge is well enough known to need no repetition.

Among the other cases that McCarthy then presented were those of Dr. Harlow Shapley, a member of a United Nations advisory commission, named to that post by the American Association for the Advancement of Science, not by the State Department; Consular Officer John S. Service; Ambassador-at-Large Phillip C. Jessup, and one alleged homosexual individual.

None of these was among the 81 cases, and therefore not among the 57 Communists whose names McCarthy said he had.

McCarthy's presentation also included the case against Gustavo Duran, not with the State Department since 1946, and Prof. Frederich Schuman, whose connection with the department consisted of a one-hour lecture to Foreign Service officers in 1946. Neither of these was among the 81.

THE REMAINING three cases McCarthy presented were those of Mrs. Esther C. Brunauer and Haldore Hanson, both State Department employes, and Owen Lattimore, an adviser but apparently never an employe of the department.

Mrs. Brunauer was Case 47 on the list of 81. Hanson and Lattimore may or may not have been included as case numbers in the 81. It is difficult to identify them as such. McCarthy himself did not indicate whether they were when he testified about them.

The fact is, however, that in his testimony, McCarthy did not charge any of the three with being Communists or "loyal" to the party.

He said Mrs. Brunauer's Communist front associations were such as "to seriously question her security status."

As to Lattimore, McCarthy said he had a "pro-Communist record" and was "an extremely bad security risk."

Hanson, he said, had "pro-Communist proclivities" and believes that the Communists in China "stand for everything that is great and good" and that he has "a mission to communize the world."

Remarkably Vague

THESE are clearly not complimentary remarks; but, on the other hand, they are considerably more vague comments than a man would use when he was attacking persons that he knew were Communists.

McCarthy did not say at Wheeling, at Reno or on the Senate floor or in a telegram to Mr. Truman that he "suspected" 57 people now in the State Department were Communists. He said that they were—period. This suggests he knew they were.

This reporter, on the other hand, does not know that the list of 57 Communists in Senator McCarthy's hands must have been pretty poorly documented. But he suspects it.

Loyalty Files

It is worthy of note that the FBI did not open its files in the case of the alleged "top Soviet espionage agent" under investigation by the Tydings Subcommittee. Instead, members of the subcommittee went to the Department of Justice and were given in confidence a "complete analysis" of the material in this one FBI file. Obviously this is a very different matter from turning the files over to the committee. It may well be that this cooperative gesture will serve the double purpose of deflating Senator McCarthy's unsupported charges and of saving the FBI from the grave interference with its work that would certainly result from an exposure of its sources of information.

The case that the subcommittee chose to investigate in this manner was carefully selected. Senator McCarthy had not only indicated that his most serious charges were directed against the individual in question; he had also said that his general accusations as to disloyalty in the State Department would stand or fall on the outcome of this key case. This apparently means that the accusations will fall, for the data given the subcommittee by the FBI is said to sustain no such charges as those the Senator has made. Certainly it is desirable for the public to be given as many facts as can be released without smearing innocent persons or disclosing the confidential sources through which the FBI works. But it is well to keep in mind that a special concession has been made in the interest of establishing the truth and that it does not mean loyalty files are at the command of any congressional committee which may wish to see them.

So far as State Department files are concerned, it is interesting to note a comment by the Supreme Court in the Curtiss-Wright case back in 1936. The court said:

> The marked difference between foreign affairs and domestic affairs in this respect is recognized by both houses of Congress in the very form of their requisitions for information from the executive departments. In the case of every department except the Department of State, the resolution directs the official to furnish the information. In the case of the State Department, dealing with foreign affairs, the President is requested to furnish the information "if not incompatible with the public interest." A statement that to furnish the information is not compatible with the public interest rarely, if ever, is questioned.

Since it is obviously not compatible with the public interest to broadcast from the congressional sounding board hearsay and gossip about individuals in the Government service or to cripple the important work of the FBI, the committee will have to do its best to expose Mr. McCarthy's aberration without free access to the loyalty files.

V. I. Governor

The appointment of Mr. Morris de Castro to be Governor of the Virgin Islands to succeed William H. Hastie reflects credit on the President. This was a case in which political pressures might obviously have been very strong for the appointment of a mainland Negro. Mr. de Castro is not a Negro. He is a member of a family which has lived in the Virgin Islands for a century, and is the first native Virgin Islander to head the island administration. He has spent most of his adult life in the service of the government and has made an outstanding record for loyal hard work and integrity. As Government Secretary, he has often served as acting Governor, and so is completely familiar with every detail of the duties of the office.

Mr. de Castro was inaugurated on Friday in a ceremony which showed he has the overwhelming preponderance of local support. He himself had firmly declined to lift even a finger to get the job, holding that since he was already in government service he would accept it as a promotion but would not campaign for it. Such modesty and high ethical standards are too rare.

In this appointment of a native Governor of the Virgin Islands the President has again given emphasis to the important national policy of developing self-government in our off-shore possessions. For a native to assume the important office of the governorship now when the Virgin Islands are rapidly emerging as a delightful winter resort area and when the nine million dollars economic development program of the Virgin Islands Corp. is getting under way, is renewed evidence that, in our statements of policy toward our Territorial areas, we mean what we say.

We extend to the Virgin Islands our congratulations on their first native governor and to Mr. de Castro our best wishes for a constructive and happy administration.

Informing The World

It is high time the United States tried to capture leadership in the world of ideas in the manner Senator Benton has suggested. The bolder foreign information effort he calls for, in a resolution introduced in company with 10 other Senators, is affirmative action of the right sort. Reports from southeast Asia, one of the crucial areas, tell of the lag in knowledge of America and American aims. The riot in Saigon was a prime example of misunderstanding about American purposes. In this case, perhaps, the Voice of America cannot be blamed, for policy in Indo-China still remains in semicloudland. It is basic that America be known as on the side of the hopes of the common people, not as the country whose arms are strewn all over the world.

India is another and even greater example of a land in darkness about America. Our editor, on his recent visit, noted three urgent requirements from America: more American library facilities, a steady stream of documentary films, competition with the British press ascendancy so that American news could have ready access to the Indian market. A tremendous need exists in a subcontinent which is in the throes of revolutionary change to show the people how America handled or is handling similar problems. Aside from being a vast country, India is one of many countries in the world which are in the grip of misconceptions about America produced by years and years of Communist propaganda. High and low the people speak the Muscovite patter about America. As an example it took the representative of the Free Trade Union Committee of the AFL, Mr. Richard Deverall, about a year to live down the suspicion that he must be a "Wall Street stooge." There are three excellent American libraries operated by American men and women with a sense of dedication, but they are simply scratching the surface, and the American investment is less than that of the British, let alone the Russian. Throughout the world the United States spends in total 34 million dollars in the information program, and this sum includes items that do not properly belong in that budget.

It is our experience in several other countries as well as India that the United States could profit from a thorough study of the methods pursued by other operators in this field of information. We can absorb a few lessons from the greatest propagandist in the world, viz, Russia. The Russians in this realm are supreme technicians. In India they keep in the background, and work through such instrumentalities as Czech-Indian cultural institutions, the money seeming to come from the proceeds of Czech trade with India. The British Council in its quiet and thorough way provides splendid service in the field of education—night classes, library work—in such countries as Mexico, and makes every penny count. Italians and French maintain institutes in far away places which spread respect for the values of Latin civilization. All these operations, manned by intelligent and sympathetic persons, have provided true and rewarding mirrors of the sponsoring countries, and in the case of slave-ridden Russia even a vision of a fantastic workers' paradise. America, on the contrary, is seen in vast areas of this world through a glass very, very darkly as an ogre of a money-mad imperialist.

Senator Benton would move ahead on many fronts: radio stations capable of reaching every receiver in the world; more aggressive efforts in the United Nations for freedom of information; support of the U. N. Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization; promotion of democratic education; a conference of non-Communist countries on information programs. We ourselves would pick out libraries and documentary films, a diplomatic crusade for freedom of the press, personal contact through American students and American teachers abroad, and radio stations—in that order. As to press freedom, it is our experience that the censor is beating out the newspaperman almost everywhere. Yet press freedom is a "value" the free world must treasure, and must proselytize. Time was when Lord Hawksbury could write to Bonaparte that "The King of England will make no concession to a foreign power at the expense of the liberty of the press," and when Alexander I could ask as soon as he arrived in Paris that the gags on press freedom should be removed. We applaud Senator Benton for his initiative. Here is something affirmative, something truly fundamental.

Fee For Redcaps

Four Midwestern railroad terminals have been authorized by the Interstate Commerce Commission to increase red cap charges from 15 cents to 25 cents per bag. Under the present system these fees are turned over to the companies while the red caps are paid regular wages, supplemented by the tips that they usually succeed in obtaining from travelers. The ICC explains that present charges do not cover costs and have resulted in substantial deficits.

The railroads have lost business to competing carriers by increasing passenger fares and freight. While the red cap has no competitor in the railway terminals, it is more than likely that these higher charges will take some of his custom. For travelers may prefer to carry their own baggage rather than pay higher fees, especially for lightweight baggage. Tourists making short stops are apt to be encumbered with suitcases and packages. Red cap fees, even with service charges of 10 or 15 cents in addition to the expected tips, can add greatly to the costs of such jaunts. And there is no doubt that many travelers have already taken care to reduce red cap service to a minimum. Consequently we greatly doubt whether a further increase in charges will bring in much, if any, of the additional revenue needed to bridge the gap between terminal costs and receipts.

Schism In The NLRB

No effective case has been made, in our opinion, against President Truman's reorganization plan to end the schism between the National Labor Relations Board and its general counsel. Certainly the President had authority to take this step. The NLRB was not exempted from the reorganization powers conditionally delegated to the President. Since this change was effected in one of a series of orders designed to improve the working machinery of the independent regulatory commissions, it would have been strange for the President to have exempted so obvious a defect as the separation of the NLRB counsel from the board itself has proved to be.

The NLRB was thus divided against itself in the Taft-Hartley Act in a laudable effort to separate the prosecuting and judging functions of that body. To many it seemed an experiment worth making. But in practice it has proved a failure because of the continued friction between General Counsel Denham and the board. The board members are now unanimous in saying that the division should not continue; for it has resulted in two NLRB policies instead of one and placed the board in the anomalous position of having to rely upon an antagonistic counsel to carry its cases before the courts. In short, the schism has created more problems than it has solved.

Under the new plan the general counsel would be subject to supervision by the board, while still exercising a large degree of independence in his prosecuting activities. Investigative and judging functions would not be entrusted to the same persons. This seems to us to satisfy the requirements of fairness if unbiased personnel is chosen. There is less argument today for keeping the prosecuting arm outside the board than there was under the Wagner Act, when the board's sole function was to foster the interests of labor and deal with unfair labor practices on the part of employers. Today it is concerned with unfair labor practices by both employers and unions. It must assume an impartial attitude if it is to serve its function properly. The same is true of the prosecuting arm. There seems to be a dangerous tendency on the part of some groups to regard the general counsel as partial to employers and the board as favoring unions. Perhaps that is an inevitable consequence of the separation. In any event, the aim must be for high-minded and impartial service on the part of both, and we suspect that this can be most readily attained if the present invitation to friction is removed.

From Two To One

The sale of the morning Constitution to the evening Journal and the consolidation of their Sunday editions make Atlanta the latest big city to become a one-newspaper-property town. Both newspapers had a quality of their own, and the competition was good for this important community, giving the people maximum news service and varied comment. The statement announcing the sale says that editorial policies will remain independent, but the independence of two papers under a common proprietorship is a dilution of the term.

The merger trend of newspaper properties is gathering momentum throughout the country. This is the situation at last count: 10 States had not a single city with competing daily papers; 22 States were without Sunday newspaper competition; 14 corporations owning 18 papers control about a quarter of our total daily circulation; there are a thousand fewer owners than a few decades ago. One of the worst developments is the steady disappearance of the local weekly; no fewer than 3200 have gone out of business since the First World War. This is bad, for the local weekly is, traditionally, the backbone of local democracy.

How the trend can be stopped is less easily answered than how it happens. It is due in great part to the tremendous rise in the cost of running a newspaper. "Economic reasons," says the Atlanta announcement, "have played a large part in dictating this move." The newspaper industry is marked by feather-bedding practices similar to those in the building industry. Other costs are so high that it is very seldom that there is a newcomer able to maintain competition. A tremendous capital investment is necessary to start a newspaper and nurse it to financial maturity. Freedom of the press is not served by the present trend, for all monopolies invite Government intervention, especially one that constitutes, as somebody put it, the application of the managerial revolution to the realm of ideas.

Viet-Nam Riot

The account of 4000 Vietnamese demonstrating in Saigon to protest against the presence of two warships and the show of naval and aerial American might over this city was a clear example of unfortunate misunderstanding which may endanger the good relations of our two countries.

Generally the Vietnamese have great esteem for America, not because they were attracted by American rosy life pictured in Hollywood movies shown in Viet-Nam, but mostly because of what America stands for in life, i.e., for freedom, and for the weak against the strong.

A close observation of the slogans used by the demonstrators, such as "Down with American aid" and "Down with Bao Dai" reveals the misunderstanding—through association of ideas—of the people in Saigon in regard to American aid and American support. They undoubtedly believed that these planes and these warships were American aid (or spirit of this aid) to Bao Dai regime, which they thought to be a symbol of Western imperialism.

The real purpose of American action is—to me—very much different, as I believe that if there is any American aid to Viet-Nam at all, it should be economic and not military, to the people of Viet-Nam and not to Bao Dai. If the Vietnamese did not welcome this economic aid, a demonstration should have been held during the visit of the American Economic Mission in the country.

To misunderstand is disastrous, but to create such a misunderstanding is more harmful. This heavily weighs upon the shoulders of our American friends who did not give a clear explanation about their actual action in Saigon.

It is high time, I believe, to correct this misunderstanding. Every action should be explained clearly as to its actual and real intention (which may not necessarily be the same) for the interests of both parties concerned.

Gubitchev's "Love"

The reports have it that Comrade Valentin Gubitchev has left the shores of the U. S. accompanied by his devoted wife. Good riddance

Miss Judith Coplon, whose trial in Washington I attended, acted beautifully under the guidance of her excellent coach the part of the love-stricken young girl. Alas, justice fooled Cupid, thank Heaven.

The authors of this transparent defense must have a very poor opinion of the intelligence of the people that live in the free countries of the world. It still could have passed as a love romance for some good souls that see in every couple a potential "Romeo and Juliet" had not the end been so revealing. The villain, the married seducer, going to "Paradise" and the wronged one remaining in the "Inferno" with only a "Good Luck" message.

A Communist's heart beats only for the "mother country" and its glory—love, as we know it, especially love for a member of an "imperialistic country" is one of the seven deadly sins. It is true that often the Soviet Union sends ignorant officials abroad but hardly ever foolish or sentimental ones. One thing they are trained to remember and that is that there is no mercy or excuse for human frailty. As the defense would have it, that is what Gubitchev is guilty of. Had love put Gubitchev on the bench of the accused he would never have had the courage to go back and face the consequences.

Playing Safe

I saw two Russian spies on K st. at 10th, and overheard one say to the other, "Tovarich Ivan Ivanovich, I just received a message from the Kremlin." The other asked, "What is the message, Tovarich Igor Igorotsky?"

Igor handed the message to Ivan, who read it aloud to himself: "The Kremlin instructs all Russian spies, saboteurs, and the military, that in case of atomic war with the USA, all should refrain from bombing Washington. These instructions are issued because the Russian General Staff knows that if the politicians in Washington were destroyed, 90 percent of the confusion, incompetence, graft, thievery, dissension and subversiveness that exist in the USA would disappear with them.

Said Ivan to Igor, "In case of an atomic war between the USA and the USSR, the safest place in the USA will be in Washington."

Potatoes A La Mode

A newspaper columnist in Washington says there would be no potato surplus for the Federal Government to dispose of if the women of the land would eat their mashed potatoes with milk gravy and no qualms. He failed to say anything about the male sex eating its share of the potatoes.

If the newspaperman and members of Congress are interested in a woman's opinion on the subject, I should like to say that it isn't fear of becoming too stout but rather a distaste for the work involved in preparing meals that causes many women to use few potatoes.

When the average wife asks her husband what he would like to have for dinner, he usually replies, "Oh, anything will please me." Therefore, the woman takes down several cans from the pantry shelf and, with the aid of a can opener, she prepares a meal of canned soup, canned pork and beans, or a beef and vegetable stew, and a can of peaches or some other fruit.

There would be no potato surplus if the men would get into the habit of suggesting to their wives that they serve potato pancakes at the morning meal, potato and cheese souffle or potato cassolettes for lunch and potatoes au gratin or potato fritto misto for dinner.

"Reform In Connecticut"

Your March 21 editorial comment that a "Little Hoover Commission" is making an heroic effort to modernize Connecticut's State government is probably true in regard to a large part of Connecticut's State constitution, but your indorsement is too sweeping. The commission would make the Governor a dictator. In some parts of the State government, the commission would go far enough toward totalitarianism to endanger democracy itself.

If the Connecticut Commission has its way, the Governor will be given complete authority to appoint all department heads to serve at his pleasure and to fix their salaries at his discretion below a statutory maximum. He could veto the General Assembly on any appropriation or any portion of any appropriation. He could transfer, consolidate or abolish any State function or governmental organization by executive order, unless both Senate and House affirmatively disapproved by a majority vote of their entire membership within 30 days of continuous session.

Connecticut's "Little Hoover Commission" would strip the State board of education of its powers, abolish the trustees of the university, and place all public education directly under the Governor.

The commission's proposals do particular violence to the principle that a State agency for education must be organized and administered on a politically nonpartisan basis. It is impossible to teach effectively in a political atmosphere.

Similar principles of operation apply to the official agencies through which the people govern their system of education. Partisan politics has no place in local boards of education, where board members are as close to the people as any political officer. Neither does it have a proper function in the State board of education, for here is the State's quasi-judicial and rule-making source of professional decision. Only as the General Assembly makes high general policy for the State system of public education along with all the other functions of State government should public education and our system of politics merge.

As a practical matter, no Governor could give the time and attention required to perform the policy-making functions now performed by the State board of education, even if he should be qualified and inclined to do so. The commissioner of education would be forced to become an educational dictator, safe in his dictatorship as long as he remained in the good graces of the Governor.

We should keep the schools close to the people and at the same time free to operate on a professional basis and without partisan political interference. Our system of education in local communities is a State system. Local board members are legally State officials locally selected. If the State agency for education is organized and conducted on a political basis with its potentially great powers of supervision over local schools the entire system will inevitably become political. It is a fundamental principle that the practical problem of policy development for education must be one for laymen selected on a nonpartisan basis rather than for either politicians or professional educators.

The same principles apply to the operation of teachers' colleges, vocational schools, the State department of education and the university. The Governor cannot take the place of a lay State board of education in formulating policies and evaluating programs in these areas of State school administration, if for no other reason than the Governor's insecure tenure and his lack of personal time to develop educational policies. Experience in many States proves that a Governor's bad record in education becomes evident too late to protect the schools and colleges.

If the "Little Hoover Commission" in Connecticut has its way, partisan politics will interfere with the best aspects of the present administration of education, undermine both the State and local school systems, and reduce the quality of all the public schools and colleges of Connecticut.

Division In Belgium

By Andre Visson

Leopold's Return

THE SO-CALLED "royal problem" which has plagued Belgium since the end of the second World War has become a grave Belgian crisis. For five years the Belgians have been discussing whether King Leopold should or should not return to his throne. But since the referendum of March 13 the Belgians are discussing an infinitely more important problem than the name of their constitutional ruler: whether it should be Leopold III or Baudouin I, Leopold's oldest son. They are now engaged in a passionate debate on what is the best way to save Belgium's unity. Will Belgium's unity be better preserved with or without Leopold?

The referendum of March 13, which gave to Leopold 57.68 percent of the total vote, revealed a very deep and potentially very dangerous split among the Belgians. The national majority expressed itself in favor of Leopold's return to his throne. But the people of Belgium learned from the referendum that they are divided on the fundamental issue of their political life not only along political or religious lines, but also—and most especially—along what the Belgians prefer to call the "linguistic" line, the most lamentable division of all, for it opposes the French-speaking Walloons to the Flemish-speaking Flemings.

It is in the nature of a democratic republic that its president is a man of that party which has obtained the majority or a plurality in the national vote. But a constitutional king is supposed to be above political parties. His function is to be the symbol of national duty and the guardian of constitutional rights.

It would have been most regrettable, therefore, if, out of the referendum, Leopold had come forth having all the conservatives and the clericals for him and all the liberals, the Socialists and the anti-clericals against him. He would then have been a "political" king, instead of being, in accordance with the constitution, a "national" king.

BUT THE referendum made of Leopold the figure of a king infinitely more tragic than that. He has presented himself to his people—and to the world—not as a "national" king, but as a "regional" king: he is backed by 72 percent of the Flemings but by only 41.1 percent of the Walloons! In the area of Brussels, the capital of the nation and melting pot of a mixed population, Leopold could not obtain more than 48.1 percent of the votes.

This is Leopold's great tragedy, and for the industrious and courageous people of Belgium it is an even greater tragedy.

The Belgian nation is not a homogeneous one like the French, the Dutch, the Norwegian, the Swedish or the Danish. It is a composite nation of Germanic Flemings and of French-speaking Walloons. In the course of centuries the Flemings and Walloons have worked out their common pattern and have succeeded in creating a national community which has attained a remarkable, truly admirable prosperity.

In this community French culture and the French language became predominant during the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries. The Belgian voting system favored the upper and middle classes which had accepted the French language and culture. But under the growing pressure from the workers and the farmers, voting rights were progressively extended. The universal suffrage established in 1893—and then tempered by plural voting—became truly universal in 1919, after the first World War.

THIS extension of voting rights to the workers and farmers allowed the Flemings, who were becoming numerically stronger than the Walloons, to express their particular aspirations. In 1921, Flemish was recognized as the administrative language of the Flemish-speaking districts. But it was not spoken by King Albert, Belgium's most popular king. His young heir, Leopold, was taught Flemish, however. It was thought that, by knowing Flemish and becoming well acquainted with Flemish literature and culture, the next king would indeed be king of all the Belgians — the Flemish as well as the Walloons.

Leopold grew up in the midst of the continued struggle of the Flemings for the affirmation of their rights. He grew up with the feeling that the Flemings, numerically the stronger group in Belgium, were called to play an ever greater part in national life. His closest friends and advisers were Flemings—the poet Herman Terlinck and Gen. Cyril van Overstraeten. He felt that his mission was to nip in the bud the Flemish separatism which the Germans fostered during the first World War and which continued to foment between the two wars. His great objective was to make all the Flemings feel that their interests and aspirations were as close to his heart as those of the Walloons. His policy of Belgian neutrality, proclaimed in 1936, was motivated mainly by the desire to win Flemish support.

He certainly succeeded in his efforts. Even his marriage to the daughter of a Flemish politician contributed to increase his prestige with the Flemings. But he lost the confidence of the Walloons. This is the tragic meaning of the present Belgian crisis.

U. S. Labor Helps Halt Arab Arms

By Drew Pearson

NOT SINCE before the war had the Nation's two top labor leaders, Bill Green of the AFL and Phil Murray of the CIO, sat down together—until the other day.

Green dropped in at Murray's room at the Carlton Hotel. They exchanged a few pleasantries, and it was pretty much like old times. Phil wanted to know how the AFL executive board meeting went at Miami, and Bill wanted to know about things in the CIO. Then they went over to the White House to see the President

Bill Green is a Baptist and Phil Murray a devout Catholic. They were brought together by a Jew—Henry Morgenthau, jr., former Treasury Secretary. He asked them if they would talk to President Truman about the British policy of arming the Arabs against the Jews in Palestine.

They did so, and they found the President quite sympathetic. He had not known that the British were selling destroyers, tanks and even jet planes to Egypt.

Later, Murray had lunch with Secretary of State Acheson—Green being out of town—and discussed the same subject. Acheson said he had taken the matter up with Foreign Minister Bevin, who told him the British would continue shipping arms for two reasons: (1) To fulfil their commitments, and (2) because Britain wants a bulwark in the Near East in case of Russian attack.

"Hmp!" snorted Murray. "If you want a bulwark in the Near East, you shouldn't pick Egypt. You should pick Israel. They beat Egypt and six other Arab countries a short time ago."

Acheson later took up the matter with Bevin again and now has obtained a commitment that the arms shipments will stop. Britain is about to reverse its entire policy toward the Arabs and give its support to Israel. This is the most important inside news to come out of London for some time.

A-Bombing Instructions

MAYOR BOWRON of Los Angeles dropped in at the Senate atomic hearings the other day and gave the Senators a piece of his mind on failure to keep the mayors of America informed regarding civilian defense against atomic warfare.

Bowron's views are echoed by a lot of other mayors, plus the United States Chamber of Commerce. What they may not know is that President Truman's failure to appoint a chairman for the National Security Resources Board is one reason for their being kept in the dark.

One year has passed since the Senate refused to confirm Truman's close friend, former Gov. Mon Wallgren of Washington, as chairman of this board, and the President has left the job open ever since. Meanwhile, the Russians not only have developed the atomic bomb, but have the secret of the hydrogen bomb. Despite this, the Government agency supposed to prepare the United States for such emergencies remains without a head.

However, subordinates in the NSRB have worked out a painstaking program of instruction to civilians in case of atomic attack. These instructions will soon be sent to the mayors of all cities as the result of Bowron's request. They are not cheerful instructions, but since the American public has to know them eventually, here is a brief summary:

First, civilians are advised to get a blood test. You should know your blood type, because transfusions are essential for treating radioactivity. Later, the Red Cross will give courses in atomic first aid.

Second, if you are building a new home, include a basement. It will be the safest place in an atomic blast.

In case of an atomic alert, close all doors, shut all windows, draw all blinds, make your house as airtight as possible. It takes surprisingly little shelter to protect you from an atomic blast. Wear light, sleeve-length clothes. Dark clothes absorb atomic heat. Lie flat on your stomach against a wall. Shield your head in your arms. Stay away from windows, which splinter and fly inward in an atomic explosion.

After an atomic attack stay inside as long as possible, while the radioactive atmosphere clears away. Throw out your silverware and prescription drugs, which are most likely to get contaminated with radioactive particles. For the same reason, don't pick up souvenirs—particularly silver and gold. Wear hat and rubbers outside. Avoid water holes and rubble.

The best treatment for radioactivity is plenty of soap and water, especially in your hair and under your fingernails. Bandage all cuts and test food with a Geiger counter. It takes a heavy dose of radioactivity to harm you from the outside, but only a small dose on the inside.

Note—Insiders say that one reason for Truman's delay in appointing an NSRB chairman is that amiable John Steelman, White House assistant, has an affinity for being temporary chairman himself.

New Legal Ground Broken

Press-Radio Ad Rivalry Tested

By Ted Principotte
Cleveland Plain Dealer Reporter

CLEVELAND, OHIO.—A Federal judge here has begun studying 1300 pages of testimony, 277 documents and an unprecedented set of trial facts in a new exploration of the complex antitrust laws.

Those laws ordinarily are applied against big business combines. But in the case before United States Judge Emerich B. Freed of Cleveland, a daily newspaper — a comparatively small one—is the accused monopolist.

From his study of evidence produced in an eight-day trial, just completed here, the judge will determine whether the Lorain (Ohio) Journal, an afternoon paper with a circulation of about 20,000, broke the antitrust laws by its competitive policy against a radio station and a weekly newspaper.

As the judge himself took occasion to observe from the bench, the lawsuit did not involve any "tremendous" combine. Nevertheless, it has importance. It developed a new set of facts hinging on newspaper-radio rivalry. It posed some new legal questions.

No Daily Opposition

THE civil action started last fall by the Justice Department concerns the neighboring cities of Lorain and Elyria in nearby Lorain County. Lorain, a steel-making town on Lake Erie, has a population of about 45,000. Elyria is a county seat of 26,000 population.

The Journal, Lorain's only daily paper, is a lusty, prosperous publication. It has not had daily competition since 1932, when its owners absorbed the old Lorain Times-Herald.

The weekly involved is the Lorain Sunday News, a shopping newspaper which publishes a Sunday issue.

The radio station, which figured more prominently in the trial as a Journal rival, is WEOL-FM, with studios in Elyria and Lorain. It barely made ends meet last year with a $2600 profit.

The Government charged that the Journal tried to monopolize news and advertising in Lorain and used unfair business methods to hurt the radio station and the Sunday News.

Ad Contracts Canceled

VICTOR H. KRAMER, chief prosecutor, built his case with 65 witnesses, 259 exhibits and interpretations of the law which, he argued, put the Journal and WEOL in interstate commerce despite their local character.

Kramer and three associates concentrated on the Journal's policy of discouraging its advertisers from using WEOL or the Sunday News for advertising. A parade of Lorain merchants testified that the Journal canceled their ad contracts because they also used WEOL or the Sunday News. The businessmen switched back to exclusive Journal advertising in view of this policy, they testified.

D. P. Self, business manager of the Journal, hedged as a hostile witness called by the Government, but finally admitted, under judicial prodding for a direct answer, that "We did," in response to the question:

"Did you tell Lorain Journal advertisers that they could not continue to advertise in the newspaper if they advertised over Radio Station WEOL?"

30-Day Clauses

WHEN Samuel A. Horvitz, publisher of the Journal, testified as the defense's only witness, he frankly said his paper discouraged the merchants from radio selling campaigns and took advantage of 30-day cancellation clauses to cancel contracts of merchants who persisted.

He said the paper first advised the merchants to try the radio ads alone to see if they paid off in new business.

Horvitz denied boycotting advertisers of the weekly newspaper rival and offered names of 30 merchants who, he said, used both the Journal and the Sunday News.

In defense of the policy toward merchants who used WEOL, Horvitz insisted that the Journal had the right to reject or accept what advertising it pleased. He maintained also that this policy was not unfair to the Lorain merchants, because the Journal for years had "protected" them by refusing advertising from out-of-Lorain merchants.

His testimony caused an unexpected tussle between Kramer, a Yale Law School graduate with a dozen years' service in the Justice Department, and Parker Fulton, veteran Cleveland lawyer representing the Journal.

'Outside' Listeners

WHAT had looked like a minor trial point suddenly became important. In their final arguments, both lawyers dwelt at length on the interstate commerce issue. If the newspaper and radio station were not engaged in State-to-State business, then the Federal laws did not apply.

The fast-talking Kramer argued that so long as a single electronic note from WEOL was heard outside Ohio, the station was in interstate commerce. Earlier he had put on out-of-State WEOL listeners as witnesses. He contended that the Journal, through its national news, advertising and supply connections, also was in interstate business.

Fulton argued that while WEOL, mechanically speaking, may not be purely local in view of its out-of-Ohio air range, it nevertheless is purely local as a business enterprise. Both the Journal and WEOL are only "incidentally" involved in interstate commerce, he asserted.

Antitrust Expert

JUDGE FREED, who is expected to spend several months in study and research on the case, is rapidly winning national recognition in the field of antitrust law.

As a former United States Attorney here, he prosecuted an antitrust suit against the Hartford Empire Co., and other major glass-container producers in a 19-month-long trial. Only recently he decided a cartel suit against the Timken Roller Bearing Co. of Canton, Ohio, world's largest in its field.

Two years ago, after he had disposed of 400-odd motions, an antitrust suit against the stencil-making industry and stencil paper suppliers was concluded before him with a no-contest plea. Still pending before him are a suit against the General Electric Co. and companion suits to the Timken one against two other tapered roller bearing producers.

He has been on the Federal bench here since 1941.

The Lorain Journal case marked the first time that radio-newspaper advertising rivalry had figured in an antitrust suit. Even newspaper-newspaper rivalry over ads is a fairly new antitrust topic. The only case decided was a criminal one against the Chattanooga News-Free Press in 1940, when a jury cleared the paper on one count and found it guilty of another. The paper allegedly put clauses in its ad contracts requiring advertisers to advertise exclusively with it for afternoon publication.

The judge imposed a fine of 1 penny. No transcript was made of the case. Thus, the Journal case here is looked upon as the one which will set precedent in this new phase of antitrust law.

By Katharine Graham

TWO prominent Washington correspondents write in the Atlantic on separate but related subjects. Columnist Walter Lippmann offers the mounting crisis in our foreign relations as proof that the Truman Doctrine and its corollary, the policy of the military containment of Russian communism, has failed. He calls for a revision of our foreign policy in the light of facts.

At the root of both Soviet and American policy in recent years has been the idea that the world must inevitably stand divided in two, part Communist and the rest non-Communist. Now there are vast and vital regions, argues the columnist, which are breaking loose from one camp and which do not want to be in the other.

This, together with Russian progress toward the bomb, leads Lipmann to suggest that instead of forming our own global coalition, we attempt to frustrate Russian attempts toward a coalition by fostering independence and neutrality in the critical areas.

Conflict between officials and reporters "over what information about foreign affairs should be made public" is rapidly becoming an important issue, says James B. Reston, the New York Times' correspondent. In an objective appraisal of the dispute, Reston admits the official difficulties involved. On the other hand, he points to instances in which a more liberal policy of informing the public could have prevented divisive and bitter public arguments.

As the power of the executive branch of the Government grows in this field, the duty of the responsible press to discuss our plans and policies grows too, Reston concludes.

WITHOUT any warning, the FBI came and knocked at the door of Angela Calomiris in February, 1942. Agents informed her that she could serve her country by joining the Communist Party and reporting to the FBI on its activities. After thinking it over, she complied, and for seven years thereafter she lived a dual life until she was called on last year to testify at the conspiracy trial of the Communist leaders in New York.

In True, the magazine for men, the story of her experiences makes absorbing reading. She tells in detail how the comrades live, work and plan in a substate of their own, complete with laws, regulations, courts, police, schools, press, art and literature. Much worse than the admitted physical danger of her role, according to Miss Calomiris, "was the crashing dullness of the life," full of endless party activities and intrigue.

LIFE runs a series of magnificent exclusive color pictures of the excavations below the great basilica of St. Peter in Rome. For 10 years, ever since a workman broke through by accident into a small vaulted chamber not even marked in the foundation plans of Renaissance craftsmen, excavations have been progressing slowly and painfully by hand toward the spot where, according to the tenents of the Catholic Church, the bones of St. Peter were buried about 66 A. D.

Not all the results of the excavations have been announced by the Vatican. But conclusions can be drawn confirming the Roman tradition which closely connected Nero's Circus and the Vatican burial ground—in other words, the place where St. Peter was executed and the place where he was buried, according to Msgr. Ludwig Kaas, administrator of St. Peter's.

LUNCHEON for eight on a day's notice in Hearst's lush House Beautiful is a complete and interesting menu, most of which can be prepared the day before. Mainstay is coq au vin. Tips on casserole cooking of both meat and vegetables can be found in Flair's French issue, by an American woman who lived for years in France.

Several different ways of cooking ham are offered. One is in the Ladies' Home Journal, baked ham loaf for six on p. 72, and others are in Better Homes and Gardens, two pages of ham treats on pp. 77 and 78. In the same mag are steaks of every cut cooked in every way . . . bananas, too. A complete dinner that can be gotten up in 30 minutes is in American Home. Main dish is meat and cheese toast cups.

A Trivial Matter Delays Delegate

MELBOURNE (ONA). — The Dominion of New Zealand and all the Australian states were represented recently at a convention of Australian police chiefs. They gathered here to swap notes on how to catch the wicked and nefarious in these immoral climes.

A courtesy invitation had been dispatched to a Ceylon police official, an East Indian, whose bailiwick is not within Australia but who is confronted with the same antisocial behavior. When the meeting opened, the chairman announced that he had just received a communication from the Ceylon dignitary, in this vein:

"Honorable Gentlemen: I regret that I am unable to accept your courteous invitation because, ridiculously enough, I am in the Colombo penitentiary serving an absurd term for trivial malfeasance in office. I will be out of jail for the convention next year, however, and would appreciate a bid to your distinguished gathering at that time."

Matter of Fact

Genius Needed as Economic 'CO'

By Stewart Alsop

IF President Truman approves a proposal which has been submitted to him, the Help Wanted sign will soon be out for a genius. It will require a genius to fill the job the new plan will create. For the job involves a complete redirection of American economic policy in line with Secretary of State Dean Acheson's doctrine of "total diplomacy."

The new plan is one of the first fruits of the over-all review of American policy on which Acheson and his chief subordinates have been engaged ever since President Truman announced his decision to go ahead with the hydrogen bomb. One of the basic conclusions reached in this policy review was that the American Government could no longer safely consist of a whole series of independent and mutually antagonistic satrapies, all working at cross purposes.

"The United States," one of those engaged in the policy review has remarked, "is rather like Primo Carnera. Carnera was always bigger and stronger than any of his opponents. But he was slow and clumsy and without coordination. A straight punch from Carnera would knock any man cold. But he never succeeded in landing anything but glancing blows. That's our trouble."

Fast Footwork Needed

ACHESON and his planners concluded that if Carnera-like defeats in the cold war were to be prevented, "total diplomacy" was required, with the American Government capable of acting quickly, flexibly and with authority. The question was how to achieve this clearly desirable end. The State Department's first proposal was that the authority of the National Security Council should be greatly expanded.

The NSC is now essentially a necessary common meeting ground—or more often, these days, a battle ground—for the State and Defense Departments. The original State Department idea was that the NSC should be transferred into a sort of American Politburo, or high command for fighting the cold war, not only in its strategic, but also in its immensely ramified economic, aspects. Every major action of the American Government, at home and abroad, was to be weighed by the NSC in the light of its impact on the cold war. Thus "total diplomacy" was to be achieved.

This proposal was submitted to the Budget Bureau. The Budget Bureau opposed it, on the sound ground that the NSC was not created to exercise this sort of authority. All the members of the Cabinet, it was pointed out, except the Attorney General, would simply wear different hats as members of the NSC. Authority would thus be as diffuse as ever, and, moreover, the essential strategic function of the NSC would be weakened.

Other proposals have also been considered and rejected, including the old idea that Treasury Secretary John Snyder, as chairman of the Treasury-dominated National Advisory Council, should become the cold war's economic high commander. The Budget Bureau is principally responsible for the new plan now under serious consideration.

A Breath-Taking Task

THIS proposal calls for leaving the political-strategic responsibility in the NSC while creating an entirely new organization to deal with the whole range of American economic policy wherever it impinges on the world struggle. The new organization would be headed by a man of sufficient stature to exercise independent authority in the name of the President.

The scope of the task envisaged in this plan is downright breath-taking. The new organization would be charged first with evolving a coherent over-all world economic policy. To gain acceptance for the new policy, a nonpolitical economic commission like the pre-Marshall Plan Harriman Commission might be appointed—a step which was approved months ago by Acheson, Snyder and ECA Chief Paul Hoffman, but which has since been smothered in the usual red tape.

Once an over-all policy was evolved, the new organization would have to wrestle with a whole series of problems which have been conveniently shoved under the rug—the post-Marshall Plan dollar gap, the British sterling balances, American tariff and import policy, the Middle Eastern oil problem, American shipping and American agricultural surpluses, to name only a few. Dealing intelligently with any of these problems requires stepping hard on all sorts of politically important toes. Obviously a genius of sorts would be required as head of the new organization, to deal with the violent resistance which would surely be forthcoming not only in Congress but within the Administration itself.

Geniuses are rare in government these days. And even a genius will be helpless so long as business-as-usual continues to be the theme song of the Truman Administration. But the mere fact that the proposal outlined above is being seriously considered suggests that business-as-usual may be coming to an end. At least ideas are beginning to germinate in what has been a desert of inertia.

Our Political Economy

Currency Union Faces Obstacles

By Ysabel and Robert Rennie

IF ECA Administrator Paul G. Hoffman has his way, Europe's trammeled currencies will by next June be freely transferable among themselves. This would mean that Europe, at least, would return to multilateral trade.

This plan proposes a clearing house for Marshall Plan countries through which they would settle accounts with one another. At present these settlements are mostly on a bilateral basis. Under the proposed payments union, accounts would be settled multilaterally.

For example, if a Marshall Plan country bought more from the others than it sold them, it would owe, not the countries individually, but the currency pool. A country which, on the other hand, sold more than it bought, would lend the pool a certain amount of its own currency.

Accounts would be settled once or twice a year. If a nation owed the pool money, the debt would be covered from three sources: (1) the debtor country would settle part of the deficit in gold or dollars; (2) creditor nations would cover part of the deficits by loans of their own currency; and (3) the rest would be made up from a Marshall Plan fund which in the first year would amount to 600 million dollars.

Penalties Involved

AFTER 1952 Europe can no longer count on United States aid. The plan therefore involves diminishing reliance on ECA funds, so that by the end of the Marshall Plan, surplus and deficits would have to be small enough to be financed without American assistance.

This plan would encourage countries to get their trade into balance. Countries like Britain, which buy more than they can pay for, would be penalized by having to pay off part of the deficit in gold and dollars.

Countries like Belgium, which sell more than they buy, would also be penalized by receiving only partial payment in gold and dollars, and being required to extend credits to the debtor nations.

Barter trade, double pricing, dumping and import and export controls within the currency union would presumably be banned. The idea is to use Marshall Plan funds in these last two years to free European trade from the almost hopeless complications which today beset it.

British Objections

THE PLAN faces a number of obstacles. The most serious of these is Britain.

Sir Stafford Cripps has objected that the plan is too much like a return to the old international gold standard and that in view of the present "dollar shortage" it "would necessarily restrict trade." By this he means that Britain would buy less because she would have to pay for what she bought.

The British treasury has said it would be willing to join if we would guarantee it against any loss of gold or dollar reserves. In plain words, the British will go along if they do not have to balance their accounts.

One big fear they have, and it is not entirely irrational, is that the 3.2 billion pounds of sterling balances held by countries like India, Pakistan and Egypt would seep into the payments union through European exchange markets. This would quickly drain Britain of her gold and dollars and hit hard at the pound's stability.

But if Britain remains outside the union, she stands to lose 150 million dollars in American aid.

There are other obstacles to the plan.

Protected industries and trade unions in these countries do not want outside competition. They oppose an end to trade barriers because they believe the barriers protect their jobs and markets.

Objections to the plan have also been raised in this country. ECA dollars for the clearing house would be "free" dollars, not earmarked for purchases in the United States. The Agriculture Department fears this would make it impossible to unload our food surpluses in Europe, since many sterling countries can provide food at a cheaper price.

The National Advisory Council, representing State, Treasury, Commerce, the Federal Reserve Board and the Export-Import Bank, had reservations of its own. It feared that the union, limited to Europe, would be unduly restrictive and discriminatory, and that it might turn out to be merely a device for balancing intra-European trade accounts with dollars supplied by us.

Costly Competition

NEVERTHELESS, the plan deserves a trial. If Europe can become a unified market, it can supply itself with many of the things which today must be bought in the United States.

The Balkanization of trade has intensified the dollar shortage. Instead of helping each other, European nations have been bidding for dollars, protecting uneconomic industries within their own borders and refusing mass markets to industries in other countries. This has made for high prices and low living standards.

Perhaps the European payments union should be operated within the framework of the International Monetary Fund, instead of outside it. But it is an idea which holds real promise for world trade.

'Carpetbagger' Argument Is Hollow

By Harry N. Stull

AS THE CAMPAIGN in Congress to secure consideration of the Kefauver bill nears its final stages, the opposition becomes more vocal and less convincing. We are now told by a leading opponent that the legislation would result in "carpetbag" government.

STULL

This alleged argument is based on the assumption that the appointed city manager would not necessarily be a resident of the District and could appoint to office persons living outside the District or recommend the appointment of persons at the behest of members of Congress or other influential people. This statement loses sight of the fact that the city manager, himself merely an administrator, would be subject to dismissal by the elected city council and at all times would be subject to its direction. A mere regulation by the council that such employes must be bona fide residents of the District, would prevent any city manager from appointing nonresidents.

At the last meeting of the Federation of Citizens Associations, the delegates were given some of the most straightforward talk ever heard by that body in a report on federation efforts to bring the Kefauver bill out of the House District Committee. Undoubtedly, some amendments could profitably be made to that measure, but when organization representatives claim that this is not real home rule and that such can only be obtained by securing an amendment to the Constitution providing for representation in the House and Senate, the proper answer is the celebrated one made famous by General McAuliffe at the Battle of the Bulge.

It is a most encouraging sign when moral elements of our community, through the Washington Federation of Churches, petition Congress for the enactment of home-rule legislation.

In the past week the Kalorama and Shepherd Park Citizens Associations have directed the attention of their members to the ravages of the Japanese beetle and have made plans to formulate a method of control. This is a continuation of efforts made by the Federation of Citizens Associations, with the aid of a number of its constituent bodies, to unite in an attack on these destructive pests. The 1949 campaign to secure the cooperation of residents on a community basis met with considerable success. It is expected that other organizations will become active in this worthwhile effort.

Civilian Defense Screening

GEN. GORDON R. YOUNG, who now seems to be shouldering the entire burden of the city's administration, has requested $30,000 to set up a civilian defense plan for the District. This organization would be large but not expensive, since it would be made up largely of volunteers.

The Federation of Citizens Associations, at its last meeting, suggested that all volunteers be screened for loyalty before acceptance as workers in civilian defense. This is a laudable suggestion and one that undoubtedly will be adopted. As a practical proposition, however, it may be difficult to put into operation.

In our previous experience in civilian defense, the attempt was made to screen all volunteer workers to insure that they had never been convicted of crime. With many thousand fingerprint reports as guides, the effort to eliminate the undesirables was not altogether successful because of confusion and misunderstanding, the inability to demand the presence of those being investigated and the refusal of some individual volunteers to subject themselves to discipline.

It is hoped that some plan can be devised by which volunteers can be investigated before and not after their enrollment. Certainly this is one service where loyalty investigations are necessary to thwart infiltration and consequent disruption of the organization.

Bridge Squabble

THE CONTROVERSY over the location of the Anacostia River bridge has subsided temporarily with the recommendation of the subcommittee that it be placed on a line with East Capitol st. Engineer Commissioner Young, who has borne the brunt of attacks from officials of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission, as well as from a former chairman of that body, struck back last week in defending his recommendation that the bridge be located on the East Capitol st. site.

This long-drawn-out controversy only emphasizes what has many times been stated: that a reorganization of the Distrct government is necessary. Until the duties and responsibilities of the Planning Commission and District engineering officials are redefined, these differences will constantly arise, to the confusion of District residents and taxpayers.

New Yorkers Are So Provincial

By Benjamin Muse

CORRECTION please, Winchell. A recent Walter Winchell column had this one:

"The Governor of Virginia, H. H. Edwards, refusing to sit down at Jimmy Kelly's Greenwich Village place until the band played 'Dixie' . . ."

MUSE

The Governor of Virginia is a fellow named Battle. However, we are glad to hear that Horace Edwards is having a good time in New York.

THE Ninth District Republicans have set out on another congressional campaign. Their candidate, George C. Sutherland, would hardly unseat Democratic Congressman Thomas B. Fugate, even in a 100 percent pure election, but Virginians should ponder a plaintive resolution adopted at the GOP convention last week.

The Ninth District Republicans, after condemning the General Assembly's failure to act on the absent voters law, said:

"We are still faced in this approaching campaign with the same law, which will permit this coming election to be stolen."

Actually, the coming election will not be stolen. Mr. Fugate will in all probability be reelected by a comfortable majority of honest votes. But many fraudulent votes will be cast.

If the few cases of absent voter fraud that have been publicized were all there was to it, the General Assembly might be excused for not getting excited about this matter. But it is vastly more serious than that.

This writer hasn't the primary evidence to prove it—those who have collected evidence have found that it serves no useful purpose—but in the Ninth District, and in a few sections of the Seventh where there is stiff Republican competition, "everybody knows" that cheating under the absent voters law is a scandalous commonplace.

An Ugly Fact Emerges

THE General Assembly met last January with a hot case of absent voter fraud before it, and nearly everybody from the Governor down thought that something ought to be done about the iniquitous law. But nothing was done. It is one more instance of dereliction of duty in an uninspiring session.

Coming increasingly out into the open, meanwhile, is the ugly fact that fraudulent absentee votes are widely depended upon to keep the Democratic Party in the ascendancy in the once stubbornly Republican Ninth District. It was a Democratic State Senator who intimated as much in the recent session.

"If the Democrats of southwest Virginia can't stay in office except by stealing elections, as has been virtually charged by one of their number," fulminated the staunchly Democratic Richmond Times-Dispatch, "they don't deserve to remain in control."

It would be far from just, however, to place all the blame on the shoulders of the Ninth District Democrats. For one thing, Republicans out there get away with a trick or two in the counties which they control, and Heaven knows what they would do with the voting processes if they were on top again in the district. A few Ninth District Democratic leaders, notably Lieutenant Governor Collins and State Senator Stuart, have striven courageously for absent voter law reform.

'Outside' Statesman Needed

BUT the thing is hardest to tackle precisely where conditions are worst. Few politicians want to elaborate in public debate on the election methods used by their friends, or the friends of their friends, or even themselves. It is just a self-perpetuating, ungodly mess.

The need is to break down the inertia of the State as a whole. What this column is getting at is that somebody from another district—the Eighth, for instance—where interparty strife is limited and where elections are reasonably pure, should carry the ball.

Surely a determined statesman from this area could build up a movement for repeal of the present absent voters law and carry it to success in the next session of the General Assembly. The man who does it will serve Virginia well, and he will win the gratitude most of all of the good people of southwestern Virginia.

And a word of advice to the legislatures of other States: Never under any circumstances let a thing like the Virginia absent voters law get on your statute books!

Mahoney Throws Puzzling Punches

By James P. Connolly

GEORGE P. MAHONEY'S formal candidacy for the Democratic nomination for Governor being almost a month old, there is some perspective for an appraisal of his campaign and the issues thus far.

CONNOLLY

The campaign is very much one-sided at the moment, since Mahoney is the only serious candidate in either major party who has filed. Having the field to himself so far in advance of the September primary may not be an unmixed blessing, and Governor Lane may be content to let him keep it for quite a while. Five months is a long time to sustain an attack, especially against passive opposition.

So long as the challenger is alone in the ring he is somewhat in the position of shadow-boxing, and the more blows he throws now the less fresh thunder he'll have when the battle is joined. By that time his material may be stale, and he may be like the fighter who leaves his bout in the gym.

Lane Has Met Payrolls

WITH HIS opening gun, Mahoney blasted the sales tax and dinned the old familiar demand for a business administration, as though his opponent were no businessman—or not much.

Lane's public life naturally overshadows his private business interests in the public eye. But it is no secret that he is owner of a Hagerstown newspaper, a former counsel for the Western Maryland Railway Co. and a former director in various banks and industries in and around Hagerstown. The Governor relinquished his active interest in all except the newspaper when he assumed office.

Shooting at the sales tax, Mahony charged that it was rammed down the legislators' throats. For the record, the tax first was proposed by the State Board of Revenue Estimates. When the Assembly balked at the tax, the opposition was invited or challenged by the administration to produce an equal or better plan. The best it could bring forth was a miscellany of small new taxes or tax increases of doubtful yield, and the hodge-podge was given short shrift.

The Assembly rejected the sales tax on a Saturday but reversed itself the next week and accepted it. Meanwhile, administration troubleshooters had been called up to persuade some vote changes, and that was all there was of any throat stuffing.

A Puzzling Broadside

OTHER POINTS in the Mahoney campaign are rather mystifying. At one of his largest meetings, in Baltimore last Sunday, Mahoney charged that the county schools have been "miserably neglected"— hardly a condition, even if confirmed, to rouse a metropolitan rally.

The charge was part of a broader and equally puzzling attack on the administration school and road programs—puzzling because these generally are considered administration strong points. Under the Lane regime, teachers' salaries have been lifted to near-top level.

Mahony, however, said that more should have been done for the teachers and that the postwar increase in the school population should have been foreseen and better accommodated.

This criticism struck some ears as incomprehensible, because it hit Mahoney's friend, former Gov. Herbert R. O'Conor, harder than it hit the incumbent.

Finally, although he opposes the sales tax, which partly finances the school program, Mahoney promised a better deal all around at less cost. He has not been specific about how he would reconcile these irreconcilables. He has spoken only generally of better budgeting.

A Lane War Cry

THERE ARE no indications that the Mahoney challenge has cracked the solid front of the regular Democratic organization. No sooner had Mahoney filed than Mayor D'Alesandro of Baltimore flatly declared for Lane, and his home ward Democratic club followed with a quick endorsement of the Governor.

The mayor does not control the city Democratic organization but he is strongly influential in it. And in defense of the sales tax he may have coined a war cry. He said: "I wish I could pay all my taxes with pennies."

At his meeting Sunday, Mahoney accused "the politicians" of "ducking" him because he "won't make deals." Reading between the "ducks," this was taken as a roundabout revelation that recognized leaders have been keeping clear of the Mahoney candidacy.

Perils of One-Party Rule Cited In Government Structure Study

Home of the Supreme Court . . . "It is almost enough simply to know that it is there"

By J. R. Wiggins

AN ANATOMY OF AMERICAN POLITICS. By Arthur Bernon Tourtellot. Bobbs-Merrill. 349 pp. $3.

A SECOND stimulating book on the structure of American Government, within the month, suggests that traditional interest in politics may be reasserting itself after a period of preoccupation with economic problems.

MR. TOURTELLOT

Speculation on the organization of Government seems to fascinate American readers. Perhaps it is because it is so difficult to explain, logically, the success of the American system, or lack of system. We continue to seek an explanation for it.

The explanations of Arthur Bernon Tourtellot in "An Anatomy of American Politics" and those of Herbert Agar in his recent "Price of Union" have much in common.

Agar took up his study as a historian and laid his analysis of institutions alongside a chronological outline. Tourtellot attacks the problem topically. He breezes through a historical resume for the purpose of getting to his anatomizing, topic by topic. His first chapter is a little flippant as a treatise on the origins of political action. The subsequent discussions are of more solid stuff.

Contemptuous of Congress

HE IS, like Agar, partial to the executive and the judicial branches and contemptuous of Congress. This paragraph summarizes his views:

"The Congress of the United States has, from the beginning, suffered declining prestige, weakened influence and a more or less chronic inability to get its work done, as the Presidency has in general grown and as the Supreme Court has on the whole held its own."

He feels that Congress has not evolved into the "great and powerful forum the Constitution anticipated." Its almost fatal fault, he thinks, is its tendency to become a "conglomeration of local views and attitudes." This he would cure by electing the Senators at large—or at least half of them. He would put the same poultice on the House, cutting its membership 70 percent and electing it partly from the States and partly at large. This in an unlikely prescription without a chance of adoption.

It is a weakness of Tourtellot's appraisal of the Legislature that it takes no cognizance of the "third house," the vast "chamber" of lobbies representing every interest, movement, class, faction, industry and group. A realistic scrutinizer of the political anatomy should not overlook this part of the Government.

Unassailable Guardian

THE Supreme Court, Tourtellot feels, "has created a political morality which has made the selfish political leader pause and the careless one think twice. It is almost enough simply to know that it is there and, by popular will, unassailable."

Tourtellot's analysis of the Supreme Court fight of the Roosevelt Administration is not particularly penetrating—or accurate. He slips in reporting that "Congress emphatically defeated it when it came to a vote." Of course, it did not come to a vote, but died painlessly under the skillful anesthesia of that expert parliamentary anesthetist, John Nance Garner. At any rate, it was not adopted, so Mr. Tourtellot's report remains essentially, if not literally, true.

The remarkable elasticity and expansibility of presidential power impresses Tourtellot as it has impressed every observer of the American scene. He notes, with the same awe that others have chronicled this phenomenon of modern politics: "None of the strong Presidents has abused the powers of the office, however extraordinary at some times they have been, for none of them has used such extraordinary powers in a spirit or toward an end inconsistent with the purpose for which they were granted."

Tourtellot agrees with Agar that the political parties are distinguished more by their similarities than by their differences. But he does think the parties differ fundamentally in philosophy. He sees the Democratic Party, since 1932, attuned to the demands of the time—"progressive Government action to keep capitalism on the side of the people." But he is not so enamored of the New Deal and Fair Deal as to overlook risks of long tenure. He finds it a threat to the "knowledge of when to stop."

Entertaining Spectacle

THE political convention and the political campaign both undergo dissection. Tourtellot is too conscientious to overlook all their faults, but it is apparent that he enjoys the circus spectacle of the country's bumbling nominating and electing machinery in action. He has a timely chapter on the electoral college in which the advocates of the Lodge amendment will find some ammunition.

Men as well as measures engage Tourtellot's attention, and his treatment of both will provoke controversy. His observations on Wilson and Roosevelt are especially interesting. He credits Wilson with "immense erudition in political science" and a "practical political skill of a high order." He finds Roosevelt "less skilled in building a legislative program than Wilson, and less knowledgeable."

He does not agree that Roosevelt "ushered in a new order" and points out Wilsonian and earlier precedents for most of the Roosevelt innovations. Nor does he agree that Roosevelt sought the destruction of free enterprise and the capitalist system, as the critics of FDR contend.

Tourtellot seems to agree with Louis Bean that the progressive push of the Democratic Party will keep it in power through the '50s. The prospect is not wholly pleasing to him. He concludes:

". . . the great political need of our times is a popular conservatism that will serve as a realistic and enlightened balance to what will soon be a 20-year-old progressiveism."

Unless this happens, he foresees the danger of one party government, and he fears that this is "an eventuality which our present political processes could not survive."

Nutshell Reviews of Recent Books

ROUGH JUSTICE. By Ernest Haycox. Little, Brown. 177 pp. $2.50.

THE nine short stories by Ernest Haycox collected under the title of "Rough Justice" are several cuts above the average "Western," and will be enjoyed by the adult reader. Haycox writes as if frontier society had more on its mind than homicide, and his tales have more than the two dimensions of the movie screen. Eight of the stories appeared in Collier's or the Saturday Evening Post, the ninth in Adventure.

HUMANITY UNLIMITED. Twelve Sonnets. By Carl Van Doren. College of William and Mary, Williamsburg, Va.

ALPHA CHAPTER of Phi Beta Kappa has published in attractive format 12 sonnets read by Carl Van Doren before the chapter at William and Mary last December. Six of the graceful poems have previously appeared in the Nation.

BRAT FARRAR. By Josephine Tey. Macmillan. $2.50.

MISS TEY, whose "The Franchise Affair" won critical applause last year, has given a unique twist to an old device—that of the imposter. To make it difficult, her Brat Farrar is posing as a twin, and must face it out with his "brother." This Farrar is a right guy, however, and the theme of Miss Tey's novel is his progressive, uncomfortable involvement with the sturdy yeoman family of Ashbys, whose life is horses and whose home is Latchetts. There is mental and physical violence in this story of a fraudulent outsider who made himself loved, but it is Miss Tey's portrait of an English country family at work and at play that will remain with the reader. The writer is also a playwright and a biographer under another pen name.

HOW BRAVE WE LIVE. By Paul Monash. Scribners. $3.

THIS is a story about "the generation that doesn't have the courage to get lost." This generation comprises several people who live in Greenwich Village and who are, fundamentally, looking for security. There's a mediocre writer who puts out a best-seller and whose aims in life are to overcome his stuttering and be accepted into the bosom of the group. A Jewish artist rants through several pages to justify his faith or his bad conscience. A thwarted singer whose particular problem is that she's neither white nor Negro finds salvation of a sort in Haiti. A fanatic who imagines he's Christ is popped away into an institution, and a girl who can't do much of anything except drink spends most of the time in a bar called "The Marino." The author has a wry wit and seems to know his characters quite well.

Little Fish Get X-Ray Of Federal Leviathan

By Edward T. Folliard

A HOOK IN LEVIATHAN. By Bradley D. Nash and Cornelius Lynde. Macmillan. 234 pp. $3.

CALVIN COOLIDGE used to like to say that the people are the government. His purpose was to remind the people that government business was their business, and that, therefore, they ought to take a greater interest in it.

The authors of this book have been animated by pretty much the same thought. They have labored, however, under far more compelling circumstances. Today, the American system of government is facing its greatest challenge, and the Federal establishment and the Federal budget are of a size that would raise the hair on Cal's red head.

Bradley D. Nash and Cornelius Lynde feel that the effort now being made to reorganize the Government is of "deep personal importance to every citizen . . ." They know that few persons are likely to wade through the detailed recommendations of the Commission on Organization of the Executive Branch of the Government, headed by former President Hoover, an enterprise that involved reports containing more than two million words. Accordingly, they have tried in "A Hook in Leviathan" to tell the story in a way that can be more easily grasped by those who pay the bill.

Some Disagreements

THEIR striking title comes from Thomas Hobbes ("This great Leviathan, which is called the State, is a work of art . . .") and from the Book of Job ("Canst thou draw out leviathan with an hook?"). They differ with the majority opinion of the Hoover Commission in some instances, but throughout they have attempted to supply a background for fair judgment and intelligent evaluation.

Arthur Krock of the New York Times, himself a keen student of government, thinks that the authors have succeeded in their effort to write in popular terms, and says so in an introduction.

"This book," writes Krock, "describes the biggest fish in the world and is written for the benefit of 150 million little fishes."

Nash and Lynde are not afraid of Big Government. The only thing that is extraordinary about the spectacular growth of our own Government, they say, is that it has come in such a short period—within two decades. They think this has been in accordance with the Nation's destiny.

What they are concerned about in "Leviathan" is improvement of government, the uprooting of some nineteenth century administrative machinery in favor of machinery that more becomes a country that now, in the middle of the twentieth century, is the hope of the democratic world.

Economy Secondary

A SAVING of perhaps four billion dollars annually may result from reorganization, the authors say, but they emphasize that economy is only a part of the objective. Speaking of our huge Government, they say:

"How to mold this body into an effective force, responsive to the public will, is perhaps the greatest immediate problem. Is Russia correct that the modern state must be so organized that a central government controls and directs the total energies of its citizens?"

Absolute perfection in government cannot, of course, be expected, the authors point out, and they quote a wise old New Englander of 150 years ago, Fisher Ames:

"A monarchy is a merchantman, which sails well, but will sometimes strike a rock and go to the bottom; while a republic is a raft, which would never sink, but then your feet are always in water."

Substitute "dictatorship" for "monarchy," say Nash and Lynde, and the simile applies to the world of today. They have done a good job in telling how the republican raft can be made more buoyant and serviceable, and how the American rider can get more for his money.

Relentless Age Creeps Up on Love

GIVE US OUR YEARS. By Margaret Culkin Banning. Harper's. 274 pp. $2.75.

MISS BANNING is a smooth, prolific writer, and her newest novel has all the ingredients of success. It is definitely written for the afternoon serial circuit, whose legion will easily identify their sorrows with those of the heroine but will at the same time find titillating escape in the book's atmosphere of wealth and glamor.

Eve Starr (female characters are named Eve, Iris, Linda, Holly) is growing old when we find her at the beginning of the book awaiting the birth of her third grandchild. She is 48. However, she is beautiful, alluring, glamorous, and charming, and what's more she's one of the Nation's 10 Best Dressed. It's hard to do it on her inherited income of about $150,000 a year, especially when her husband Alec (male characters are named Alec, Jay, Orin) only makes $100,000 as president of his steel company. But Eve manages.

She manages her grown children less successfully. They, too, have problems relating to age, interlocked with problems of love, money, infidelity and family position. But the principal theme is the desire on all hands to preserve youthful love in the face of the relentless years.

Perhaps it is unnecessary to say that Miss Banning pleasantly solves all the insoluble problems: the married ones stay married, the ones who ought to be married but aren't are sure to be soon, and the only girl who doesn't get dealt a satisfactory partner receives a school to teach in, a fate which the author suggests is an ennobling substitute.

This all takes place in Chicago, or within a private plane's reach thereof. But one suspects that there must be some real people in Chicago; they can't all be paper dolls. — KATHLEEN L. BARBER.

'The Constant Nymph' Excelled

Seven Deadly Sins Come to Life

By Sterling North

THE FEAST. By Margaret Kennedy. Rinehart. 308 pp. $3.

A CLIFF in Cornwall comes crashing down upon a seaside inn. Because of flaws in their characters, several people are killed in the landslide. Because of certain virtues they possess, others survive.

The plot sounds contrived—and it is. It is contrived, however, with such mature artistry, such profound understanding of each character, that "The Feast" becomes one of the most readable and most significant pieces of fiction to come out of postwar England.

Although the reader knows of the eventual tragedy from the second page of the prologue, he does not know until the end of the book who lives and who dies. Meanwhile he has become deeply involved in the intricate emotional problems of every one of the characters.

Thirteen years ago Margaret Kennedy saw a Medievel Masque performed by actors representing the Seven Deadly Sins. Why not a modern novel using similar characters?

The Seven Characters

ALTHOUGH she does not openly identify any character except "Sloth," here is one reader's guess as to all seven:

Sloth: Mr. Siddal, lazy, rather charming, totally irresponsible husband of a hard-working wife, who with her three sons has turned their large house into an inn for paying guests.

Lust: Anna Lechene, popular novelist who arrives with her young chauffeur-secretary, Bruce, for a vacation by the sea.

Avarice: Mrs. Cove, bitter, selfish widow and mother of the charming and pitiful "three little Coves," whose trust funds she will inherit only in case the children die.

Anger: Former Canon Wraxton, domineering father of frightened Evangeline Wraxton, opposed to the tender romance developing between his daughter and Gerry Siddal, eldest son of the innkeepers.

Pride: Lady Gifford, who spent the war comfortably in America while her husband carried on in blitzed and burning London. A healthy "invalid," she spends her time in bed plotting strange ruin for her husband, her daughter and her three adopted children.

Jealousy: Miss Ellis, vulgar, lazy, lower-middle-class woman hired as a manager for the inn, who does as little work as she can while meddling in everybody's life.

Dejection: Mr. Paley, who masochistically enjoys his failures and constantly broods over the death of his only child, who might have been saved had Mr. Paley not been too proud to use his wife's money for complicated medical treatment.

None of these characters is as obviously presented as such an outline might indicate. They are highly individual, have virtues as well as many vices, but stand out in silhouette against the warm and human glow of the Gifford and Cove children, the two pairs of lovers, and particularly the courageous and admirable Mrs. Paley.

It would be impossible in a short review to even hint at the intricacies of plot, or the full development given each of these complicated people. But each, for one reason or another, decides to attend, or to avoid attending, the feast planned by the Cove children to be held on safe land high above the sea. And those who are moved by the generous invitation of the youngsters, are, of course, those who are saved.

Rich Sequel Intimated

ONE THING that is always true of a good novel and never true of a bad one is that additional meaning continues to strike the thoughtful reader long after he has laid the book aside. This story goes on in the reader's mind for days after turning the last page—for a whole rich sequel of events is intimated.

And it may be 24 hours after finishing this book before you will suddenly realize that the entire story is also a parable and a morality play. That every incident has double and sometimes triple significance.

The weakened cliff, it seems to me, represents the English crisis. On a profound level, the reaction of each character to that menace is the reaction of a typical Englishman or woman to the social and political dangers confronting England.

Miss Kennedy is examining with a microscope the hearts of her fellow countrymen, from titled lords and ladies down to wholesome country girls and semimoronic stable boys. But her touch is so deft, and her meanings so slyly injected, that most readers will be satisfied to enjoy on a more obvious level the magic of her prose, the aura of her fable, and the charming continuous revelations made by her characters.

The author is at her very best with children. And the little Coves and Giffords in "The Feast" will share the perennial youth and literary immortality of the wonderful Sanger tribe in "The Constant Nymph." Margaret Kennedy has finally topped her previous success, and has written one of the most enjoyable books of the decade.

Perkins Buoyed Him Up

Tom Wolfe Is Revealed In an Editor's Letters

EDITOR TO AUTHOR, The Letters of Maxwell E. Perkins. Edited by John Hall Wheelock. Scribner's. 315 pp. $3.75.

FOR 37 years prior to his death in 1947, Maxwell Perkins was associated with Charles Scribner's Sons, the last 20 years as chief editor of the publishing house. He achieved a reputation as being a great editor.

The letters included in this volume give a peep over Perkins' shoulder as he functioned as an editor—a job feelingly described by his Scribner's associate, John Hall Wheelock, as "the dullest, hardest, most exciting, exasperating and rewarding of perhaps any job in the world."

There are letters to Van Wyck Brooks, Arthur Train, John Galsworthy, F. Scott Fitzgerald, Marjorie Kinnan Rawlings, Ernest Hemingway, Taylor Caldwell and many another, but especially to Thomas Wolfe. Perkins will always be associated with Wolfe as friend and editor.

Practical Aspects Aside

IN September, 1928, Literary Agent Madeleine Boyd sent Scribner's the manuscript of a novel called "O Lost," which had previously been rejected by various publishers. Wolfe was then in Europe.

To Wolfe in Vienna, Perkins wrote in part: "I do not know whether it would be possible to work out a plan by which it might be worked into a form publishable by us, but I do know that, setting the practical aspects of the matter aside, it is a very remarkable thing, and that no editor could read it without being excited by it."

A meeting between editor and unknown author eventually followed, a meeting from which Wolfe said, in a letter not included in this book, "I rushed out drunk with glory." The manuscript of "O Lost" was reworked, and was published in 1929 as "Look Homeward, Angel."

In subsequent letters in "Editor to Author," Perkins is seen quietly patting Wolfe on the back, telling him not to worry about a dentist's bill for which he was being dunned, telling Wolfe that "if you had to quarrel, I would suppose Mabel Dodge Luhan was the right person to quarrel with," and, when Wolfe, depressed by some English reviews, announced that he would write no more: "If I really believed you would be able to stand by your decision, your letter would be a great blow to me. I cannot believe it, though. If anyone were ever destined to write, that one is you."

An Estrangement

WOLFE dedicated "Of Time and the River" to Perkins. Later there was an extrangement, and then the last letter Wolfe wrote before his death—a moving letter in which he tells the editor, "no matter what happens or has happened, I shall always think of you."

The man Perkins that emerges from these letters is a quiet but knowing man, modest, commonsensical, harmonizing with the thoughts about editing expressed in a 1943 letter:

"Editors aren't much, and can't be. They can only help a writer realize himself, and they can ruin him if he's pliable. . . . That is why the editors I know shrink from tampering with a manuscript and do it only when it is required of them by the author. . . . When an editor gets to think differently from that, to think he knows more about a writer's book than the writer—and some do—he is dead, done for, and dangerous."

And again in a 1944 letter, reviewers and editors "ought to judge books the way they judge people."

"Editor to Author" can be read for a glimpse of authors and publishing, and it can be read for the pleasure of civilized company.

—LEE GROVE.

Back Door Becomes Front Porch

Piercing the Mists of Sinkiang

By Kathleen L. Barber

PIVOT OF ASIA. By Owen Lattimore. Atlantic-Little, Brown. 288 pp. $3.50.

THE area of the world which Owen Lattimore calls Inner Asia is shrouded in the mists of Shangri-La to most Americans who have bothered to think about it at all. In this new book Mr. Lattimore, focusing on Sinkiang, the westernmost province of China, illuminates for us the vast area of mountains, pasture lands and oases where the frontiers of China and Russia meet.

OWEN LATTIMORE

No one is better qualified to undertake such a task. Mr. Lattimore and his wife have traveled in these regions since 1926. His eminence as an authority on Asiatic politics and economy needs no explanation in Washington, where his name is currently among those so irresponsibly accused by Senator McCarthy.

Sinkiang, an area twice the size of Texas, has for 2000 years been a "land of passage" for trade and culture, the object of invasions of Mongols, Turks, Indians, Iranians, Tibetans and Chinese.

Although more or less in its political orbit for centuries, only in 1884 did Sinkiang become a province of China, and to this day 90 percent of its population is non-Chinese. Ten nationality groups, with mutually incomprehensible languages, and four principal religions divide the people of the province. The majority group in Sinkiang is the Uighur people, Turkish in origin and Moslem in religion.

The extent of Sinkiang's historical orientation toward Russia is described by Mr. Lattimore. Its minority Russian population is composed of refugees from the Revolution whose children are beginning to look back to the opportunities for technical education and employment in their homeland.

Such peoples as the Kazakhs and Kirghiz are divided by the frontier between the U.S.S.R. and China; the majorities live on the Russian side, where they have been granted more autonomy than the Chinese have allowed the people of Sinkiang, whom they have treated colonially as subject "natives."

What is the meaning of all this in the turbid conflicts of 1950 power politics? Mr. Lattimore has devoted his book more to fact than to interpretation, but several possible trends appear.

In September, 1949, the provincial government of Sinkiang declared its adherence to the Chinese Communist regime in Peking. Insulated by a feudal Chinese bureaucracy from the 1911 revolution of Sun Yat-sen and the 1927 uprising of Chiang Kai-shek, the province is expected to feel the full impact of this new revolution.

As Chinese, the Chinese Communists will probably not turn Sinkiang over to incorporation into the surrounding Soviet republics, a policy which, Mr. Lattimore suggests, efficiency engineers would undoubtedly advocate. As Marxists, however, they will surely model their administration of Sinkiang on Soviet practices in the adjacent Kazakh, Kirghiz and Tajik Republics of the U.S.S.R.

Grapevine for Asia

THE significance of the area, making it the pivot of power in Asia, is that its people will become the transmitters of news to the rest of Asia—India, Pakistan, Afghanistan and Iran—about the reality or shadow of the Communist promise.

This scholarly book on Sinkiang was made possible by a grant of the Carnegie Corp. Mr. Lattimore's Inner Asian Seminar at Johns Hopkins' Page School of International Relations carried out a group study whose well-rounded plan is evident in the addition of useful appendices on the art, archeology, literature, boundaries, soils and oil of the region.

The book is not popularly written, as the author's previous books have been, and its arrangement—history being chronicled before the description of geography and peoples—presents difficulties to the uninitiate. But the going is rewarding, and vastly important, since what used to be China's back door has suddenly become its front porch.

Notes on the Margin of the # National Book Awards

By Lee Grove

NEW YORK.—Arrived thinking about how pleasant it was to have met Huntington Cairns of the National Gallery of Art on the train. Later heard Cairns' "The Limits of Art" praised as "a perfect anthology" . . . Saw gentle Amy Loveman, long a mainstay of the Saturday Review of Literature and probably one of the most loved persons in the book world, at the party given by Sonia Levinthal of Whittlesey House for Jesse Stuart . . . Saw the Boston Herald's Alice Dixon Bond at the party, too. It was the first time we had met since the Herald's annual book fair five years ago—when I was in uniform—and was amazed when she recognized me. With a memory like that, it is no wonder she is well liked. . . . Talked briefly with the Associated Press's W. G. Rogers, who writes admirably of books, and asked Sonia Levinthal the name of the artist whose pictures hung on the walls of her modern apartment. Turned out to be her own; seems she is one of the ever growing number of amateur painters of skill.

MET Jesse Stuart for breakfast. He suggested his regular 6 a. m. time, but in deference to my soft city ways we compromised at 8 a. m. Picked up the conversation from night before and compared proud father notes on Jane Stuart, age 7, and Lisbeth Lee Grove, age not quite 3. He also asked about Washington, where he was stationed for 18 months during the war, living at the Greenway Apartments, Minnesota ave. and A st. se. He has a new novel coming next month, story of a city boy and a country boy, and a collection of short stories coming in the fall.

The fall book will be his thirteenth, he said with quiet pride; pride because "my father couldn't sign his name and my mother had only a second grade education. I guess of all the families in America, ours would have been the least likely to be picked for a writer."

Yet of five children born in a one-room Kentucky hilltop cabin, four became educators. Though he lectures frequently now, Jesse still farms a 700-acre tract at Greenup, near the Ohio and West Virginia borders. His grandfather Stuart was one of the McCoy adherents, and in this connection Jesse said Virgil Carrington Jones "has a good book" in "The Hatfields and the McCoys."

WAS brooding on an overheard fragment of conversation—"Why, even in Massachusetts, my dear, they know her name!"—when I passed Alfred Knopf, jr., at the reception preceding the Book Award dinner at the Waldorf-Astoria. He was beaming as broadly as should the publisher of John Hersey's "The Wall." . . . Ernestine Gilbreth Carey, of "Cheaper by the Dozen" fame, recalled The Washington Post Book and Author Luncheon at which she spoke and told me that she has given up her job as a department store executive for the present and is at work on another book. She was not ready at this point, however, to amplify on it . . . Mary Margaret McBride, on whose radio program Commander William Lederer had just appeared, had a good word for him and his "All the Ship's at Sea." Later heard the reference to her in Cleveland Amory's "Home Town" criticized as unjustified by someone, who added, "I don't blame her for canceling Amory's appearance on her show at the last moment."

Saw a newly published magazine article, to the effect that James Joyce's "Ulysses" was written as a misanthropic joke, dismissed with a knowing shrug. For my own part, don't think any man, no matter how peevish, would labor so long, with failing eyesight, just for spite. . . . Saw Lucy Johnson of Knopf's, and her husband, Pyke Johnson, jr., of Doubleday, both frequent visitors to Washington; they appeared to be thriving on the general air of excitement.

Publisher Robert L. Crowell was among those who thought Senator Paul Douglas's talk at the dinner, on his adventures in reading the classics while serving in the Pacific Theater with the Marines, inspiring, and wished there were more well read men on the Hill like him. . . . Mrs. Roosevelt reminded the several hundred authors in the audience that now that the United States had become a world leader it was their duty to interpret American life to readers abroad as well as at home. . . . Frederick Lewis Allen, editor of Harper's Magazine and author of "Only Yesterday," said that publishers over highballs sometimes conjure up a bogey of publishing becoming a monopoly. Allen cited figures from Publishers' Weekly to the effect that of 10,892 titles published in 1949, no publisher brought out more than 6 percent, and said that as long as this keeps up there is no point in worrying about monopoly. . . . Ralph Rusk, whose "Life of Ralph Waldo Emerson" won the nonfiction medal, said "pride of authorship is as common as mumps and measles," but reading proofs and reviews of the book are deflating. Rusk is the brother of Fern Shapley, curator of paintings at the National Gallery. . . . Nelson Algren, who was once a member of a WPA Writers' Project, and whose "The Man With the Golden Arm" won the novel award, quipped that having been a man with a tin cup for some time, it was good to suddenly become a man with a gold medal.

THE GENERAL feeling seemed to be that the committees had chosen the award winners wisely. Everyone was glad to see William Carlos Williams win the poetry award because it recognized a lifetime of work, and Robert Frost, the most frequently mentioned contender, has had so many honors heaped upon him. The award to Rusk, too, recognized a lifetime of productive scholarship. In the instance of the novel award, the feeling seemed to be that 1949 had not been a good year for the novel and Algren's was a reasonable choice.

I WAS THERE
By FLEET ADMIRAL
WILLIAM D. LEAHY
Foreword by PRESIDENT HARRY S. TRUMAN

■ From 1941 through 1945 Admiral Leahy was closer to the vital center of operation, decision and command than any American save the President. During this time he wrote extensive notes and kept a diary. I WAS THERE is based directly on that material. Nothing is from memory or guesswork. This book has the immediacy of a fresh newspaper dispatch, yet the importance of its material is such that Roosevelt and Truman specially requested Admiral Leahy to write it.

■ As the right-hand man to both Roosevelt and Truman, Admiral Leahy attended all the major conferences of the Great Powers, met all the most important and controversial figures of the decade. This book is unique in its importance as an historical document; more than that it is the real inside story of the war years by the only living American who can tell it.

Prior to publication six of the twenty-three chapters appeared in the Saturday Evening Post.

"Contains a wealth of new material. As a source of history it deserves a place on the same shelf with the products of Stimson, Eisenhower and Sherwood."
—ROBERT P. PATTERSON,

Robinson, Coan, Kozar Show Power For Griffs

By Shirley Povich
Post Reporter

Orlando, Fla., March 25.—The Red Sox, who are supposed to win the American League pennant, and the Nats who are not, left 2777 Tinker Field fans somewhat confused today. The Nats won, in a breeze, 10 to 3.

The two clubs acted as if they had swapped identities for the day. The Nats had the pitching and the power (three home runs, two triples, two doubles), and the Boston athletes could stir up only six hits.

The Nats were raging terrors against Maurice McDermott, the prize rookie left hander of the Red Sox, who had a horrible time of it trying to get 'em out. They smacked him for seven runs before he called it a sour day at the end of four innings.

Masterson Belted for Homer

Walter Masterson, who followed McDermott to the mound, was greeted with a home run salute on the second pitch he threw. Gil Coan, sent up to the plate as a pinch hitter by Bucky Harris, belted Masterson's offering far over the right field wall.

Before Coan whacked his homer, Eddie Robinson timed one of his own swings nicely against McDermott and whacked a three-run blast over the same right field wall. A bit later, in the sixth, Al Kozar varied the theme with a homer over the left field fence.

The Washington pitching took a distinct turn for the better, and doubtless caused Manager Harris to turn at least a couple mental handsprings of pure delight. Because it was young Dick Weik and Joe Haynes who turned in the six-hit job against Boston.

Weik was jolted in the first inning by a homer over the right field wall off the bat of Rookie Merrill Combs, but he steadied nicely, and gave up only three hits, two runs in the five innings he worked. The four walks he yielded represented a vast improvement in his control.

Haynes pitched three-hit ball in the last four innings, and deserved to hold the Red Sox scoreless but they came up with a solitary run in the seventh after, of all things, Sam Mele dropped a fly ball. Dom Di Maggio's double to left got the run in.

The Nats scored in each of the first six innings against McDermott and Masterson, busting out all over with power hits. Eddie Yost smacked McDermott's first pitch for a two-bagger to left, and Sam Dente hit the next one for a triple to center. After first baseman, Jack Douglas grabbed a hot grounder off Robinson's bat, Dente slid home ahead of the throw to the plate and the Nats were in front, 2-1.

Boston tied it at 2-2 in the second when Batts singled to left after Weik walked two but Irv Noren got that run back for the Nats quickly. He banged an immense triple off the center field wall after Dente singled.

Clyde Vollmer singled for the only Washington hit in the third inning but they came out of it with another run, and then in the fourth they lowered the boom on McDermott. Dente led off with a single to right, Noren followed with a single to center and before anybody was out, Robinson put one out of the park.

Coan's homer upped their lead to 8-2 in the fifth, but the Nats weren't through. Noren drew a walk, and Robinson scored him all the way from first with a two-bagger to the leftfield wall, yet. That made it 9-2, and Kozar with his homer in the sixth boosted it to 10-2, a very satisfactory margin at that point.

ORLANDO, FLA., March 25.—Officials of the U. S. G. A. are back-tracking over the trail of the Bauer sisters, Marlene and Alice, grilling tournament promoters and hinting the girls' amateur status is in jeopardy . . . a new cordiality is noted in the relations of Clark Griffith and John L. Jachym, his junior partner who was snubbed at the annual stockholders' meeting. Jachym will be Griffith's guest at the opening game . . . Trainer Anthony Mazzeo, who holds the contract on Jockey Joe Culmone, sensation of the Florida tracks, offered to sell his interest for $12,000 two weeks ago. Since Culmone's winning streak at Gulfstream Park, the price is now $20,000 . . . American League umpires rate Ted Williams as the owner of the keenest eyes among the league's hitters. "He hits at fewer bad balls and calmly stands there and takes a pitch that barely misses the plate by an inch," says one Williams admirer . . . Steve Nagy, the Nats' 29-year-old rookie left-hander from the Coast, hasn't pitched in any of the club's 11 exhibition games and is a special case on Bucky Harris' staff . . . Harris, hopeful that Nagy's shoulder trouble of last year will be eliminated, told him the day he reported: "I'm not going to tell you when to pitch—you tell me when you feel you're ready."

CLARK GRIFFITH is sore at the Oakland Club of the Pacific Coast League which, he says, promised to sell him both outfielder Jackie Jensen and second baseman Billy Martin, who ended up with the Yankees . . . Griffith says he got a run-around after buying Lloyd Hittle from Oakland for $65,000 and sending 'em pitchers Milo Candini, Forrest Thompson and Al Gettel at a time when Oakland was crying for pitching help . . . when the Nats bought Irv Noren from Hollywood, another American League club dropped out of the bidding at $50,000 because it feared that Noren, from a family of stylish stouts, would get too "hippy" in a couple of years . . . when the papers of the late Franklin D. There was no record of his famous "green light" letter to Commissioner Landis early in 1942 after Pearl Harbor, expressing the hope that baseball would continue during the war . . . the Boston Braves, represented by President Lou Perini, improved their press relations in Miami the other night with a night club and dinner party for baseball writers. Perini picked up a $2400 check at the end of the festivities.

PAUL CALVERT, the former Nat, has already had his first brush with Manager Red Rolfe of the Tigers. Calvert tried to beg off one pitching assignment and the usually mild-mannered Rolfe permitted himself an oath in telling him to "get the hell in there and pitch." . . . The Tigers are moaning about their weakness at shortstop, but it's their own fault. With smarter handling they could have owned Sam Dente who was sen to their Buffalo club for a trial a few years back and quickly dismissed—just because he didn't look impressive hitting against Virgil Trucks, the fastest man in the league . . . Before Ralph Kiner became the home run champion of the National League, he hired a professional photographer to take movies of him in action and studied them by night for flaws in his swing . . . A golf pro once tried to get Buddy Lewis out of a batting slump by telling him the timing of his swing was exactly the same as the good golf swing. "Yeah," said Lewis, "but that baseball won't hold still for me."

FRED SAIGH, owner of the Cardinals, is feuding with Branch Rickey of the Dodgers. He complains "one club owner shouldn't run down another man's team in a press conference." . . . Bucky Harris has a kind word for the catching skill of Yogi Berra, unhandsome Yankee. "He's not a bad catcher," says Harris, "only his appearance is against him and he looks crude." . . . There will be a rush on hypnotists if Dr. David Tracy gets the Browns above seventh place . . . Connie Mack, Clark Griffith and Bucky Harris will be appointed colonels on the staff of Florida Governor Warren next week . . . Sad followers of the University of Florida football team deplore the lack of State-born linemen. Good backs are plentiful in Florida, they say, but Florida boys don't plow and aren't husky enough for the line . . . ## Washington's Don Laws Wins Skating Title

By Herb Heft
Post Reporter

Washington had its first National singles figure skating champion last night when Donald Laws took top honors in the men's junior event before 5200 at Uline Arena.

The 20-year-old Gonzaga High graduate had to make up a 2.6 point deficit going into last night's free skating exhibition. He did so nobly, passing Ronald Robertson of Berkeley, Calif., for the title.

Robertson had some tough luck under the pressure of the finals. He fell once during a Double Lutz and on two other occasions he skidded off balance.

Laws, who came on later, was almost flawless. He did tilt once, but didn't go down. He received a 30-second ovation for his fancy performance.

D. C. Duo Places Third

A spectacular free skating exhibition also lifted Patsy Quick of Berkeley, Calif., from second place to the novice ladies title.

Miss Quick's victim in the shuffle was Akron's Nancy Mineard, who went into last night's payoff event with a 1.40 point lead. At the end, the 13-year-old California Miss won, 659.87 to 656.12.

Twelve-year-old Ronald Robertson, a teammate of Miss Quick, kept the lead he had piled up in school figures and won the novice men's title.

For the fourth straight year, the national fours championship went to St. Paul's Janet Gerhauser, John Nightingale, Mamilyn Thomsen and Marlyn Thomsen, the latter two twins.

Washington gained an unexpected third place in the silver skates, when, a day after official scores were announced, the auditors reversed themselves. They boosted Vera Haliday and Ed Pickens of the host club to third over Virginia Hoynes and Donald Jacoby of Philadelphia. The Washington pair had 313.9 points to 312.7 by the Philadelphians, it was discovered after a recheck.

NOVICE MEN'S FINALS—1, Ronnie Roberts (Berkeley), 675.54; 2, David Jenkins (Cleveland), 644.49; 3, William T. Lemmons (Philadelphia), 629.07; 4, Richard Branvold (St. Paul), 631.67; 5, Gary Keppler (Akron), 613.73; 6, John Castrow (Chicago), 601.52; 7, Carl Lovett (Baltimore), 590.54; 8, George Pettinger (Lake Placid), scratched.

NOVICE LADIES—First, Patricia Quick, Berkeley, Calif., 659.81; second, Nancy Mineard, Akron, 656.12; third, Catherine Machado, Los Angeles, 640.39; fourth, Carol Heiss, 635.59; fifth, Patsy Hamm, Tacoma, Wash., 626.71; sixth, Betsy Lyons, Boston, 625.26; seventh, Jacqueline Bredberg, Los Angeles, 621.62; eighth, Betty Lynne Stogner, Colorado Springs, 615.54.

FOURS—First, Janet Gerhauser, Marilyn Thomsen, John Nightingale, Marlyn Thomsen, St. Paul, 91.9; second, Dorothy Dort, Mary Lou King, Richard Juten, Daniel Ryan, Washington, 86.6; third, Barbara Davis, Elizabeth Jones, William Lemmon, James Conte, 82.4.

Baumholtz, Adkins Released by Cubs

Los Angeles, March 25 (AP).—Outfielder Frank Baumholtz and Pitcher Dewey Adkins today were released outright by the Chicago Cubs to their Los Angeles farm club.

The 30-year-old Baumholtz hit .229 in 85 games for the Cubs last season. Righthander Adkins had a 2-4 record. Paul Schramka, rookie outfielder, was returned to the Des Moines Cub affiliate.

Newsom Tries to Pitch Way Out of Chattanooga Uniform

By a Post Reporter

Orlando, Fla., March 25.—The Nats tomorrow will be opposed by the buxom figure of Buck Newsom, attired in a Chattanooga uniform. He'll be pitching for the Lookouts at Tinker Field, with one eye fixed on the reactions of Clark Griffith and Bucky Harris.

Big Bobo, who's a-hankering to catch on with the Nats, says his appearance for Chattanooga is just a sort of an exhibition to show the Messrs. Griffith and Harris what he can do.

He's been delaying the business of affixing his signature to a Chattanooga contract, and his status has created a sharp difference of opinion.

He's agreed to sign with Chattanooga," said Griffith today, "so I told Joe Engel to pitch him."

"I haven't agreed to anything," said Newsom, "and I wouldn't be pitching unless Mr. Griffith had asked me to."

Veteran observers of Newsom's behavior are laying odds, how-

Charles 8 to 1 To Beat Beshore Wednesday Night

Buffalo, N. Y., March 25 (AP).—A former sparring partner who thinks he can beat the champion gets his once in a lifetime chance here Wednesday night.

The old sparmate is Freddie Beshore. The champion is Ezzard Charles, the NBA heavyweight king. The two will meet in a title bout of 15 rounds in Municipal Auditorium.

It sounds like a plot out of a novel and Freddie, a former sailor from Harrisburg, Pa., hopes to add the upset ending. The odds are 8 to 1 that he won't. The fight will not be broadcast on television.

Freddie "earned" his title shot by losing two close 10 rounders in this city to contender Lee Oma in December and January.

Columbus, Ohio., March 25 (AP).—The National Interscholastic Swimming Coaches' Association today elected David R. Hacket of Allentown, Pa., president.

Tigers Send Vico to Toledo

Lakeland, Fla., March 25 (AP).—The Detroit Tigers today optioned First Baseman George Vico, Second Baseman Al Federoff, Shortstop Harold Daugherty and Third Baseman Bob Mavis to Toledo of the American Association.

Vico was the Tigers' No. 1 first baseman in 1948 and shared the position last year with Paul Campbell and Don Kolloway.

Giants May Add Negro Pitcher

Oakland, Calif., March 25 (AP).—New York Giants' Manager Leo Durocher said today he may have a Negro pitcher this season.

The hurler is Righthander Ford Smith, a Jersey City player whose winter home is in Phoeniz, Ariz.

The Giant manager had been following the fortunes of the Giant "B" squad in Southern California. He said Smith was the best pitcher he had seen in action on the "B" squad four-game tour.

Podbielan, Hatten Halt Bombers

Miami, March 25 (AP).—Brooklyn made it two straight over the world champion New York Yankees today, beating them, 7-2, before a paid attendance of 6365.

Joe Hatten and Clarence Podbielan scattered eight hits among the Yanks, including a home run by Bill Johnson in the fifth inning.

Jackie Robinson, with a double and single, and Gil Hodges, with a double, each drove in two runs.

Joe Page pitched the seventh and was scored on three times, although all runs were unearned because of an error by Jim Brideweiser, rookie shortstop. Carl Furillo stole home in this ining.

Bradenton, Fla., March 25 (AP).—The Boston Braves scored all their runs and nine of their 12 hits over the first five innings off starter Ken Heintzelman to defeat the Philadelphia Phillies, 6-2, in an exhibition game today.

Rookie Bob Addis, playing right field, paced the Braves attack with three singles. Warren Spahn went four innings, the longest route of any Braves pitcher this spring, and gave up both Philly runs in the third inning. Blix Donnelly held Boston scoreless over the final three frames.

Clearwater, Fla., March 25 (AP).—The Philadelphia Phillies "B" team combined a triple, double and three walks in the ninth inning today to score two runs and edge the Toronto Maple Leafs of the International League, 5-4.

The pair of runs followed a similar two made in the top of the ninth by the Leafs, the Phils' AAA farm club, on three singles and a walk.

Catcher Eddie Oswald opened the bottom of the ninth with a triple. Pinch Hitter Lou Heyman slashed out a double and moved to third on an outfield fly. Jack Brittin walked Alex Garbowski. Bill Glyn and Bill Nicholson to end the game.

Magnet Wins Capitol 'Cap With Great Stretch Run

By Walter Haight
Post Reporter

Laurel, Md., March 25.—Horse racing, making its Eastern debut here today, drew one of the largest crowds in Laurel's history and drew nearly a million dollars in betting. Actual amount was $966,467.

It was only fitting that a horse named Magnet should win the inaugural feature, the $7500 added Capitol Handicap.

Before a gathering of 21,681 (turnstile count) which included at least one "spy" from the official family of every race track on the Atlantic Coast, the aforementioned Magnet drove into the finish line three parts of a length in front of Mrs. Jimmy McGee's Little Harp with Morris Kahlbaum's Riskawhirl third in the field scratched down to seven.

Coming through the stretch as if some unseen hand was luring him on—and no wisecracks about electricity, please—Magnet collared the pacemaking Little Harp and was a going-away winner in all that the adjective implies.

Track Way Off

On a program that found the favorite players having a little luck, the winning son of Fenelon paid a handsome $22.60 mutuel. Under the handling, and a neat job it was, of Jockey Raymond Shufelt, Magnet turned in time of 1:16 4/5 for the 6 furlongs, the slowest in the 33-year history of the Capitol.

The track was labeled slow and that was a mild description, the running surface still showing the effects of the midweek downpours.

The crowd was the third largest in the history of Laurel which replaced Bowie this year as the opening Maryland turf center. The record of 23,4 was set here for a weekend program in October, 1945.

Laurel, Md., March 25.—Only $33,533 separated Laurel race course yesterday from its objective—a million dollar day. The betting totalled $966,467. The Capitol Handicap was the top wagering race with $141,951 put into the tote.

Buckeyes Beat Holy Cross

New York, March 25 (AP).—Ohio State's Big Ten champions had too much poise and finesse for Holy Cross tonight and swamped the Crusaders, 72 to 52, in their battle for third place in the eastern NCAA basketball tourney.

A sellout crowd of more than 18,000 jammed Madison Square Garden to watch CCNY's "Cinderella team" tangle with North Carolina State for the eastern title in the second game.

Ohio State, beaten only by 1 point by CCNY on Thursday, jumped off to an 8-0 lead against a starting team of Holy Cross second stringers. As things developed, that was the game.

Dr. Woodruff Wins D. C. Squash Title

Dr. Louis F. Woodruff defeated Richard D. Souder, 3-1, last night at the University Club to win the annual District of Columbia senior squash handicaps.

Robert C. Hill won the junior championship by defeating William H. Elliott, 3-0. Col. Nicholas Powell, retiring champion, was feted at a banquet following the finals.

Police Boys Club No. 4 Wins 2 More Titles

Police Boys' Club No. 4 won two more Metropolitan Police Boys' Club basketball championships yesterday at the No. 4 gym. The 80-pounders from No. 4 defeated No. 10, 23-19, and the 135-pounders nosed out No. 5, 44-42. Previously, No. 4 had captured the 90 and 120-pound crowns.

Work 3 Innings Each

Shipley Plans Triple Battery System for Terps in Baseball

Burt Shipley, Maryland's veteran baseball coach, who used a two-platoon system the last two seasons now plans to employ what he calls the three-battery system.

Ship said three pitchers and three catchers will be used in every game, each working three innings.

The Terps open their 25-game campaign Monday against Rutgers here. They play a second game with the New Jersey visitors Tuesday.

Ship used his two-platoon system, under which one full team would work four and a half innings and another would finish up, all through the 1948 season, but dropped it early in last year's campaign.

Snead Has 70, but Boosts Open Lead to 3 Strokes

Bobo From P. 1-C

Mr. Newsom Tosses at Nats Today

ever, that Bobo has come to an understanding and will sign a Chattanooga contract. However, tomorrow is the day he's been pining for.

All spring, Newsom has been scoffing at the lack of talent on Bucky Harris' pitching staff and boasting "I'm in better shape than I was when I won the pennant for the Tigers in 1941. This Club sure could use me."

That latter suggestion is not too far-fetched, either, but Bucky Harris is not yet willing to swap some of his pitching troubles for the headache of managing the tempestuous Newsom. Harris has admitted, however, that if his pitching situation gets too desperate, Newsom it within easy call from the Chattanooga farm.

Even if he had tried, and he didn't, Harris would have been ill able to conceal his satisfaction with today's proceedings in which the Nats licked the Red Sox, 10-3 . . . He saw young Dick Weik curb his wildness and pitch with assurance to hold the Red Sox to three hits and two runs in five innings . . . And he saw Joe Haynes cut loose with freedom for the first time this season in allowing only one run and three hits in the last four innings . . . The Nats' display of power was gratifying to Harris, too, particularly that of Irving Noren . . . Some of the boys had been singing a ditty entitled, "It'll be rough on Irving when they start curving," but today the golden boy from the Coast League lashed into Maurice McDermott's curves and belted a triple and single in three times at bat . . . In the field, Noren came up with a couple of sensational plays on ground balls and Clark Griffith could believe his $70,000 was well spent . . . Eddie Robinson's most scintillating contribution was not his three-run homer. He actually out-sprinted the Red Sox infield to regain first base safely after he was trapped off in the first inning . . . Mickey Grasso had a horrible time of it against the curve-balling McDermott, who struck him out three times, twice with the bases full . . . But Harris could even forgive Grasso, who handled Weik so neatly and talked the kid full of confidence.

Sam's 136 Tops at Greensboro

Greensboro, N. C., March 25 (AP).—Par golf was good enough for Sam Snead to boost his Greensboro open golf tournament lead to three strokes at the halfway mark today.

The slamming man from White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., matched par on each nine for a 35-35—70 to go along with a first round 66 to lead the field with 136 going into tomorrow's final 36 holes in this $10,000 test over the Sedgefield Country Club's 6,720-yard course.

E. J. (Dutch) Harrison, veteran Arkansas traveler, campaigning out of St. Andrews, Ill., zoomed into second place, three strokes away, on the strength of the day's best round, a 33-33—66. He cut seven strokes from his first day 73.

Sharing third place at 140 were Chandler Harper, Portsmouth, Va., and Johnny Palmer, Badin, N. C., each had his second straight par 70.

Clayton Heafner, Charlotte, who began the day a stroke out of first place, slumped to 74 and a fifth place tie with Jack Burke, jr., White Plains, N. Y., at 141. Burke had 72.

Most of the top challengers on the basis of the first-round scores, floundered despite perfect playing conditions. They just didn't have the long tee and iron shots to overtake Snead, seeking his fourth title here in 11 years.

Snead balanced an over par hole with a birdie on each nine for a pair of 35s. On 18 his 15-foot putt for an eagle 3 was short and he closed with a birdie.

Harrison had the hottest putter of the tournament working for him. The Dutchman canned a 50-footer on 2 and another on 12 for two of his five birdies. His only venture over par came on the eighth when he took a 5 after putting a ball into the water. He got that back on 12 with his long putt and on 16 dropped one from 15 feet.

Sixty-two players qualified for final play, with 149 the qualifying limit.

However, all Carolinas and Virginia pros will be eligible to compete for the usual added money for their group.

Beauty, Not Basehits, Counts With Pin-ups

By Morris Siegel
(The Man in the House)

QUALIFICATIONS for membership in the Pin-up Girls Softball Club have been eased.

No longer is it necessary to know anything about softball. Chief requirement is looks.

"Ya gotta be attractive first," chorused the Varva girls yesterday—22-year-old Leona and sister Evelyn, 18.

"Of course, if a candidate is cute and can play softball too, we won't count it against her," Leona and Evelyn quickly added. "But what we're chiefly interested in right now is looks—we want the personnel to fit our name, Pin-up Girls."

Evelyn and Leona, who qualify on appearance and ability, seem to be the driving force behind the organization of the Pin-up Girls. They're the publicity directors and if their team can play half as well as the two pert misses can publicize, the Pin-ups are in for a highly successful season.

The sisters Varva have just about completed their staff. Assisting Herbie Needham, whom they've dubbed "head coach in charge of softball," will be three coaches, Smokey Stover, Jimmy Swanson and Hal Ronning. And never has a coach had it so good.

None knows anything about softball, but even in the case of assistant coaches that isn't necessary. They were selected because of their preference—Stover prefers blondes, Swanson brunettes, and Ronning redheads.

While actual playing (softball, of course) will be left strictly to the gals, there'll be a few men in the cast too. For instance, the organization chart, as drawn up by Evelyn and Leona, calls for a male ("they must be handsome) meteorologist, numerologist, psychologist, trainer, waterboy, batboy and umpires.

"The meteorologist will give us long-range weather predictions, the numerologist will tell us when we're gonna have a good day and the psychologist will snap us out of any defeatist complex we might have. Course, we don't expect to have a defeatist complex, but if we can find a handsome psychologist we'll take him."

The Pin-ups have a weatherman on the staff already, but he may be on the way out. He's Don Matthews, a physicist at the local Weather Bureau. Last Tuesday Don predicted rain for yesterday and the Pin-ups first practice was called off.

He hasn't said what the weather will be like next Saturday, but regardless of his prediction that's when the gals are prepared to take the wraps off (figuratively speaking, naturally) their squad. First practice has been set for 2 p. m. on the Monument Grounds.

"We got a permit and everything's all set," the Varva sisters explained. "By the way, that fellow at the Recreation Board who gave us our permit is kinda cute. Maybe we ought to make him scorekeeper."

There are about 25 girls on the squad now, but there's room for plenty of more. Dial Decatur 2500 for additional information.

Cincinnati Beats Out Cards, 6-5

Tampa, Fla., March 25 (AP).—The Cincinnati Reds, hottest team in the Florida Grapefruit League racked up their fourth straight victory today by whipping the St. Louis Cardinals, 6 to 5.

It was sandlot baseball, however. The pitchers issued 15 walks, 11 of them by Redleg hurlers. There were five errors and a total of 25 runners were left stranded on base, 15 of them by the Cardinals.

Danny Litwhiler of the Reds and Stan Musical of the Cards got home runs during the two-hour and 38-minute encounter.

West Palm Beach, Fla., March 25 (AP).—Lefty Lou Brissie's return to form and two home runs by rookies gave the Philadelphia Athletics a 9-to-3 victory today over Buffalo of the International League.

Brissie held the Bisons to four hits and struck out five in the five innings he pitched. Buffalo got to Phil Marchildon for five hits after he relieved Brissie in the sixth but he seldom was in trouble.

Rookie Bob Wellman hit a three-run homer off Buffalo's Bill Swift in the sixth. A's centerfield Rookie Paul Lehner knocked one over the right field fence, a distance of 330 feet, in the third.

Yankees' B Team Whips Tigers, 7-5

St. Petersburg, March 25 (AP).—The New York Yankees' B team defeated the Detroit Tigers today, 7-5, scoring all of their seven runs off Saul Rogovin in the first five innings. In all, the young Bombers collected nine blows which included a pair of doubles by Gus Niarhos and Lou Berberet. Frank Shea, hurling the first five innings for the Yanks, did nicely enough in the first three but then weakened in the fourth and fifth, giving up four runs on as many hits.

Louis Decides to Tour With Circus for 94 Days

Waco, Tex., March 25 (AP).—Joe Louis said here tonight he would not return to the ring but instead has signed a contract to tour Canada for a circus.

The former world's heavyweight champion who retired March 1, 1948, after beating Joe Walcott, announced he would go with the Dailey Brothers Circus at a minimum of $1000 per day.

He will be with the circus 94 days starting May 24.

Before going with the circus, however, he will go to South America for an exhibition tour of ten bouts.

Louis, in a statement to reporters, thanked the public and press for their support in his ring career.

Louis said he did not necessarily want to fight Ezzard Charles, the current champion, and that "they couldn't pay me what I would want to do it anyway. I would want 35 percent and since there is only 60 percent for the fighters in a bout, the champion would have to take less than the challenger."

Louis said the main obstacle in the way of a title fight would be "all this training routine to get into shape."

On Trust Wins, Passes ½-Million

San Bruno, Calif. March 25. (AP).—Charging into the lead in the late stretch run, On Trust won the $7500 added Peninsula Handicap at Tanforan track today. The victory brought his lifetime earnings to $505,970.

The time for the six furlongs was 1:12, on a track labeled "slow."

On Trust, ridden by Steve Brooks of Chicago and packing 119 pounds, ran coupled with Prevaricator as an entry of Earl O. Stice and Son of Eagle Rock, Calif. The entry paid $9.10, $3.90 and $2.90.

Washington Woman Wins Slalom Title

Ligonier, Pa., March 25 (AP).—Mimi Burch of Washington, D. C., won the women's slalom event today as the Pennsylvania State championship ski tournament resumed after a two-year lapse. Miss Burch travelled the course in 40.4 seconds.

Navy Romps In Water Polo

Annapolis, Md., March 25 (AP).—Navy opened its water polo season today by dousing dried-out Fordham 15-0 in the Naval Academy pool.

Because of the New York water shortage, the Fordham team opened without a day of practice.

Midshipman Hal Vincent, who scored five goals, led the attack. He lobbed four short shots into the Fordham net before retiring with an eye injury after a pileup in the first period.

Terps Upset By W&L In Lacrosse

Lexington, Va., March 25 (AP).—A fired-up Washington and Lee University Lacrosse team fashioned a major upset here today in conquering heavily favored University of Maryland, 9-8.

Tommy Tongue sent the winning goal into the nets through a cordon of Maryland defenders with three minutes remaining in an otherwise scoreless final period.

The Terps, ranked third in the Nation last season, were stunned by three W&L scores in the first quarter, but took their halftime rest with a 5-4 lead on goals by Pat Walker and Hank Lowry just before the intermission gun.

The W&L stickmen tore into the heavier Marylanders with renewed vigor at the outset of the second half. Goals by Jim McDonald and Alex Hill, W&L veterans from Baltimore, returned the lead to Washington and Lee. Before the finish of the third quarter, which ended 8-8, the score had been tied three times.

Both squads played pressing defenses in the tense fourth period with Goalie Bill Clements and close defensemen Bill Pacy, both of Baltimore, helping Hill and McDonald maintain possession much of the time.

After Tongue's final counter, the General midfielders froze the ball. Charlie Herbert, of Maryland, and McDonald set the scoring pace with three goals apiece.

Mt. Washington Romps Over Cornell

Baltimore, March 25 (AP).—The Mount Washington Club, National open lacrosse champ every year since the war, opened its 1950 season today with an impressive 14-2 victory over Cornell.

The clubmen, former college and high school players, built up a 12-0 lead before allowing Jay Davis to net one for the New Yorkers in the fourth quarter.

Harry Nance led the Mount Washington attack with three goals.

Golf Pros May Appoint 'Czar'

Greensboro, N. C., March 25 (AP).—Touring professional golfers are discussing the possibility of operating under a commissioner, an all-powerful final authority who would rule the game in the same manner in which baseball operates under its commissioner.

Some of the golfers seemed to think that a commissioner to keep the players on their toes would prevent unpleasantness such as the Bobby Locke case. The South African star has just returned to the good graces of the PGA after being banned from PGA for several months for allegedly cancelling a series of bookings in this country after winning the British Open last year. The name of Bobby Jones was suggested by some as a good choice for the post.

Easter Hits But Chicubs Beat Tribe

Los Angeles, March 25 (AP).—The Chicago Cubs pounded 11 hits to whip the Cleveland Indians 4-3 today.

The Cubs hopped on Al Benton for six blows and two runs in the first five innings, then collected five hits and two more runs off Gene Bearden.

Luke Easter led the Tribe with a homer and double. His double off Walt Dubiel in the third led to one run and in the eighth he rapped one of Paul Minner's pitches out of the park.

San Francisco, March 25 (AP).—The San Francisco Seals outhit the Pittsburgh Pirates today for a 9-to-5 exhibition baseball game triumph, giving the Coast leaguers their second straight and the nod in the three-game series which ends tomorrow.

Elmer Singleton, who relieved Al Lien in the second inning, turned in a beautiful job and received credit for the victory. It was the Seal's fifth victory in seven exhibition games against major league competition.

Pirate hurlers were nearly as wild as they were in last night's game. Bob Chesnes and Hal Gregg, the first two of four pitchers used by the National Leaguers, allowed five and six bases on balls, respectively.

Salt-Water Fishing Tops In Bay Area

By Ralph Murdock

A TWO-WEEK's fishing trip in Florida has convinced your correspondent of one fact—you have got to travel more than 1200 miles to beat our Chesapeake Bay. (And we don't mean maybe.)

Murdock

To start with, we are thoroughly satisfied that fresh water fishing for large mouth bass in the sunshine State has us licked. But on the salt water side of the ledger we'll take the ole Chesapeake. You just don't get as many shutouts. As a matter of fact, it's a whole lot easier on the bankroll.

Back to the bright side—fresh water angling. We fished Lake Poinsett, an integral part of the lower St. Johns River which is supposedly a hot spot. It proved a trifle lukewarm but you seldom miss making a fair catch of large mouths. Our tops was a 3½ pounder which was taken by Herb Goodman, one of our angling cohorts. Our other accomplice, Vernon Palmer, picked up a 1½ and 2-pounder in rapid succession. A tropical downpour of rain chased us all back to shore.

Our expense account showed that one guide, two row boats with motors attached, nine sandwiches, three surface plugs and six cookes plus three breakfasts of ham and eggs stood us $35. No complaints (you understand) but still almost $12 per fish. The above figure did not include licenses. The best catch reported at this location was eight largemouths, the big one weighing 5½ pounds. The champ was taken by a lady, 75 years young.

A $60 trip on a luxurious cruiser with red overstuffed swivel chairs at West Palm Beach produced four bonita, the largest of which tipped the beam at 6 pounds. One sailfish was raised on the trip which immediately threw the hook. Our ship to shore phone announced that there were only six sails taken during the day by the fleet. The previous day's catch was a grand total of three.

AT FORT PIERCE we spent two days fishing for kingfish. The boat captains call them king salmon. In our book, the term "king" is rightfully applied. Pound for pound, they are tops. At this spot our guides were Bert Lamb and Al Corbi, who operate from the Rod and Reel Club at Chesapeake Beach during the summer months when the hardheads and rockfish are in our midst.

Bert explains it this way, "We've been down here since the middle of December. We are still greenhorns and it will take us at least two years to perfect this style of fishing. Our best haul was 1400 pounds but we are catching on to the idea fast."

These fighters are taken with steel hand lines (105-pound test) while trolling. They have plenty of haw teeth that mesh together. Our best catch was a 16-pounder which had the fight of a 25-pound striped bass. The best fishing is about 8 miles northeast of Vero Beach.

A sample of smoked "kings" served on the "Skippy" for lunch forced us into having 50 pounds of fish prepared at the smoke house at Fort Pierce.

We had a good catch of trout, bluefish and sea bass off Carlaveral Pier near Cocoa. A blank was drawn on a return trip.

1st Favorite To Triumph In 23 Years

By Ben Phlegar

Aintree, England, March 25 (AP).—Freebooter, a half brother of an Irish plow horse, won the Grand National Steeplechase today, smashing a 23-year jinx on favorites.

Never worse than third, the handsome coffee-colored gelding breezed home in the brilliant sunshine 15 lengths ahead of Wot No Sun. Acthon Major was third another five lengths back in the field of 49 starters.

The favorite's triumph thrilled a crowd of 300,000, including the royal family. After the front-running Cloncarrig fell two fences from home, it was easy for freebooter.

Monaveen Fifth

It was the first time the King and Queen attended since 1937 and the gay thousands gave them a tumuluous welcome, along with the Princesses Elizabeth and Margaret, and the Duchess of Kent. She is the King's widowed sister-in-law.

Monaveen, jointly owned by the Queen and Princess Elizabeth, finished fifth behind Rowland Roy after leading in the early stages.

Freebooter, a cofavorite with Roimond, went off at 10 to 1. He had been the public choice ever since bookies began quoting prices in January, and the huge throng still liked his looks today.

13 Horses Finish

Monaveen, a 9 to 1 second choice in the final betting callover last night which saw Freebooter favored at 8 to 1, started at 100 to 7. But the late plunge on Roimond, 100 to 7 last night, eased the odds on Freebooter. Roimond, second in last year's race, fell this time on the first time around the course, which is navigated twice.

Trailing behind Monaveen in sixth and seventh place were Ship's Bell and Inchmore, the only other official finishers. Thirteen horses came home, but six weren't classed as official finishers because the stewards said they missed one of the fences.

Freebooter carried 165 pounds, including green-eyed Irish Jimmy Power, over the 30 hazardous jump of the 4 mile 856-yard route. The time was 9:23 3/5 compared with the record of 9:20 2/5 set by Golden Miller in 1934 and equaled in 1940 by Bogskar.

Sky Shadow Wins Potomac Hunt Crown

By Harry De Mawby, Jr.

Claude W. Owen's Sky's Shadow romped to the Potomac Hunter Trials Championship yesterday in the gale-force winds that swept over the rolling hills as a large crowd of shivering onlookers enjoyed the annual spectacle of nearby Washington's Potomac (Md.) Hunt Club.

Sky's Shadow, alternately piloted by his owner and Mr. and Mrs. Gardner Hallman, earned the ladies hunter award and coupled with the Hallman's Gray Lark was also victorious in the Montgomery County Plate pair event, second in the Masters Plate event, and third in the Handy for an 11-point tally.

Col. Barrington Wilson's Jack Rabbitt, part of a recent pair race winner at the Redland races, finished in the reserve position with only one point the deciding factor. Jack Rabbitt annexed the Travilah Plate class for first season hunters and took a place award in the Handy and pair event coupled with stablemate Black Velvet.

Little Slam Wins

The picturesque running of the Foxcatchers Plate event again thrilled the throngs as Potomac's hounds set a fast pace in "full cry" and a field of some 25 entries followed M. F. H. James N. Grear over the drag-laid course simulating all the thrills and earnestness of an actual fox hunt. S. R. Maddox's Cash Cargo was pinned on top for the best field hunting performance, Mrs. D. S. Van Schaick's Alert, F. Moran McConihe's Top Secret and Mrs. Steadman Teller's Story Teller were next in line in the final placing.

Mr. and Mrs. Gardner Hallman's well known show ring winner, Gray Lark, was winner of the Handy event, and along with her pair win with Sky's Shadow, and teamed with Sky's Shadow and Samuel E. Bogely's Shady Lady, was fourth in the team event for the third best score of the day, nine points.

Little Slam, a smooth moving chestnut gelding owned by Mrs. Frank D. (Anne Hagner) Christmas, proved his worth in the hunting field by winning the Elinor Wheeler Exnicios Trophy class for Potomac members. His owner was in the saddle. Mrs. Ray Norton, jr., rode L. H. La Motte, jr.'s, Harkaway Lass to a brilliant win in the coveted Masters Plate event and a fourth in the Travilah Plate.

THE JUNIOR PLATE—1, Joe Richard, III's Kelly; 2, Bette-Barron Smith's Blue Mont; 3, Loli Carusi's Reenie; 4, Joe Smith's Flick.

THE TRAVILAH PLATE—1, Col. Barrington Wilson's Jack Rabbit; 2, Charles E. Payne's Reno Royal; 3, Mrs. Frank D. Christmas' Little Slam; 4, L. H. La Motte, jr.'s Harkaway Lass.

THE HANDY—1, Mr. and Mrs. Gardner Hallman's Gray Lark; 2, Jack Rabbit; 3, Claude W. Owen's Sky's Shadow; 4, Samuel E. Bogley's Shady Lady.

THE ELINOR WHEELER EXNICIOS TROPHY—1, Little Slam; 2, Flick; 3, Blue Mont; 4, Sky's Shadow.

MASTER'S PLATE—1, Harkaway Lass; 2, Sky's Shadow; 3, Percy N. Niepold's Four Aces; 4, Reno Royal.

THE FOXCATCHERS PLATE—1, S. R. Maddox's Cash Cargo; 2, Mrs. D. S. Van Schaick's Alert; 3, F. Moran McConihe's Top Secret; 4, Mrs. Steadman Teller's Story Teller.

LADIES HUNTERS—1, Sky's Shadow; 2, Reenie; 3, Mrs. Alice Berry's Gay Paris; 4, Blue Mont.

THE MONTGOMERY COUNTY PLATE—(pairs). Grey Lark and Sky's Shadow; 2, Mrs. Barrington Wilson's Black Velvet and Jack Rabbit; 3, Al Earnest's Dickie Boy and Ivan; 4, Flick and Kelly.

THE POTOMAC PLATE—(teams of three): 1, Jack Rabbit, Black Velvet and Top Secret; 2, Dr. James F. Grear, jr.'s Starlight, Midnight and Four Aces; 3, Dickie Boy, Ivan and Shady Lady; 4, Gray Lark, Sky's Shadow and Shady Lady.

CHAMPION—Sky's Shadow, 11 points. Reserve—Jack Rabbit, 10 points.

JONES REWARD, $33.20, $18.60, $9.60; MOON BOY, $7.80, $6.40; INDICATED, $4.40.

JONES REWARD moved into the first flight early, assumed command when ready and drew clear to win handily. MOON BOY raced MR. GREENWOOD into defeat, but was no match for the winner. INDICATED broke badly, was rushed from the outside and tired. MR. GREENWOOD vied for the lead unsuccessfully and weakened. HERE'S ED may improve. MARY BONIFACE, away alertly, could not keep up. ADELANTADO was unable to remain forwardly placed after breaking well. CONISH broke alertly and lost rider in vicinity of the 3½-furlong pole.

SECOND RACE—Six furlongs (chute). For 4-year-olds up; claiming. Purse, $2000. Went to post at 2:35. Off at 2:36. Start good from gate. Won driving; place same. Winner, Mrs. W. E. Jones' ch. m. (6) by Bewitched—Glorious Time. Trained by W. E. Jones. Time, 1:20⅘.

GLORY BE, $16.60, $5.60, $3.40; GILDSIE, $3.20, $2.40; TACARO MILKMAN, $2.80.

DAILY DOUBLE PAID $542.60.

GLORY BE, within striking distance from the start, saved ground while rallying and continued on well to wear down the leaders. GILDSIE always well placed, responded to pressure, but was not good enough. TACARO MILKMAN disposed of SWEEP 'EM to draw clear on the turn, then drifted out badly while tiring. TRANCE SLEEPER raced evenly and may improve. UNABRIDGED lacked a menacing rally. SNOW HILL came back sore. SWEEP 'EM showed good speed and quit. BRAVETTE was through early.

THIRD RACE—One and one-eighth miles. For 4-year-olds up; claiming. Purse, $2000. Went to post at 3:05. Off at 3:05½. Start good from gate. Won ridden out; place driving. Winner, W. I. Jones' ch. m. (8) by Endry—Helen Bond. Trained by C. A. Cranford. Time, 2:05⅘.

HELEN DEAR, $8.60, $4.20, $3.20; DRY, $4.40, $3.20; EASY HOMER, $4.20.

HELEN DEAR, far back through the first 5 furlongs, moved into contention on the final turn and continued her rally under intermittent pressure to draw clear through the stretch. DRY, steadied during the early stages, wrested command on the final bend, but was unable to resist the winner. EASY HOMER rallied only mildly. GENE CHANCE, rated while in front, tired badly. BAREFOOT BOY rallied to the quarter pole and tired. ESCORT was through early. MIRAGE showed nothing. TWO DAY AIR quit.

FOURTH RACE—Six furlongs (chute). For 3-year-olds; claiming. Purse, $3500. Went to post at 3:35. Off at 3:36. Start good from gate. Won easily; place driving. Winner, N. Kahlbaum's br. c. (3) by Challedon—Doreena. Trained by M. Kahlbaum. Time, 1:16⅘.

DOREEN'S BOY, $21.00, $10.60, $7.80; TRANS EGRET, $9.20, $6.40; SCHEMING WORLD, $21.20.

DOREEN'S BOY, in close attendance to the pace from the start, assumed command when MAKE HAY weakened on the turn and was not threatened thereafter. TRANS EGRET saved ground while improving her position, but could not menace the top one. SCHEMING WORLD was beaten off by the top pair, but outfinished afterward. The latter raced evenly. BOUGENT'S mild rally enabled him to catch tired horses. GRANDMA'S BABY broke badly and caught tired horses. MAKE HAY flattened out badly after being in front along the backstretch. MARIAN ANN quit. LOVE LOCK showed nothing. SIR SAG turned in a miserable effort.

FIFTH RACE—Six furlongs (chute). For 3-year-olds. Purse, $3500; allowances. Went to post at 4:05. Off at 4:06. Start good from gate. Won easily; place driving. Winner, High Ground Stable's b. c. (3) by Roman—Royal Imp. Trained by J. B. Bond. Time, 1:17.

PREPARED, $5.20, $3.20, $2.40; HALTER, $4.60, $3.00; BROKEN CROWN, $2.40.

PREPARED, alertly handled leaving the gate, was steadied just off the pace of HALTER, responded smartly when roused and drew clear to win with speed in reserve. HALTER set the pace to the stretch but was unable to retain his advantage despite carrying out and bumping PREPARED. BROKEN CROWN failed to rally when called down for the drive. FLYING MANE tired under pressure. WILEY FOX flattended out badly. SIGN IT was outclassed.

SIXTH RACE—Six furlongs (chute). For 3-year-olds up. Purse, $7,500 added; the Capitol Handicap. Went to post at 4:36. Off at 4:36½. Start good from gate. Won driving; place same. Winner, W. P. Taylor's b. g. (4) by Penelon—Dorothy Owsley. Trained by E. Meloncon, jr. Time, 1:16⅘.

MAGNET, $22.60, $8.20, $6.60; LITTLE HARP, $4.20, $3.40; RISK A WHIRL, $5.80.

MAGNET was not rushed while within striking distance of the early leaders, responded well to join LITTLE HARP from the outside in midstretch, then proved best in the final stages. LITTLE HARP drew clear after 3 furlongs, continued to hold a commanding advantage at the furlong pole, then tired and gave way. RISK A WHIRL raced on the outside and weakened. FLYING WEATHER raced forwardly while steadied early, but failed to respond. GOLDEN BULL could not keep up. OTTER BROOK did not fancy the going. ORIOLE was always outrun.

SEVENTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. For 3-year-olds. Purse, $2500; claiming. Went to post at 5:05. Off at 5:05½. Start good from gate. Won driving; place same. Winner, W. P. Taylor's ch. g. (3) by Jacomar—Bird Haven. Trained by E. Meloncon, jr. Time, 1:53⅘.

SIR JACOMAR, $8.80, $3.60, $3.00; TIPSTAFF, $3.20, $2.60; COUNT CHRIS, $5.00.

SIR JACOMAR disposed of ATTENTION SIR early to attain the lead, raced TIPSTAFF into defeat and drew clear while being kept to pressure. TIPSTAFF was not rushed while in close attendance to the pace, challenged leaving the backstretch, but was not good enough and dropped back steadily. COUNT CHRIS caught tired horses, as did RAY DON. ATOMIC CLOUD showed nothing. BLABBER MOUTH was through early. ATTENTION SIR stopped to a walk after showing in front briefly. NO MORE HASH was outrun.

EIGHTH RACE—One and one-eighth miles. For 4-year-olds up. Purse, $2000; claiming. Went to post at 5:35. Off at 5:35½. Start good from gate. Won driving; place same. Winner, Mrs. A. Jensen's br. g. (5) by War Peril—Little Flit. Trained by A. Jensen. Time, 2:02⅘.

RESOJET, $7.00, $4.20, $3.20; JOE'S SUN, $8.60, $5.20; AIR FORCE II, $3.00.

RESOJET steadied when in close quarters along the inside early, was eased out for his rally, wrested command entering the stretch and withstood an extended drive. JOE'S SUN rallied well to engage the leader in early stretch, then was not good enough. AIR FORCE II rallied to midstretch, weakened and came back lame. PLACERVILLE improved his position boldly while under steadying restraint entering the stretch, then faltered when set down for the drive. ENDEAR tired after being well rated in front to the stretch. SHASTA TURBAN showd nothing.

McNeill Wins National Tennis Title

Kovaleski Beaten Out In Four Sets

New York, March 25 (AP).—Don McNeill of New York and Nancy Chaffee of Ventura, Calif., today won the singles titles in the National Indoor Tennis championships.

McNeill, winner of these laurels 12 years ago and the 1940 champ at Forest Hills, was too smart for Fred Kovaleski of Hamtramck, Mich., beating the former William and Mary College star, 11—9, 4—6, 6—2, 6—2.

Miss Chaffee added the singles crown to the mixed and women's doubles titles she won last night. The 21-year-old California girl, unranked because of illness last summer, defeated Althea Gibson, first Negro ever to be a finalist, 6—0, 6—2, in a 40-minute finale.

Miss Gibson, from New York, is the current Eastern indoor queen.

Gertrude Moran of Santa Monica, Calif., now on a tour, won the women's indoor title last year while Pancho Gonzales, now a pro, took the 1949 men's crown.

Kovaleski started his bid in the final just 13 hours after leaving the court at 1:15 a. m., finishing up last night's marathon program.

His last night's play obviously took plenty out of the 25-year-old former National Public Park champion who, after the first two hard fought sets with McNeill, lost the steam in his service and the spring in his legs.

For two sets, it was a fight of long exchanges, once the service could be put in play.

Kovaleski fought off five McNeill game points to hold a 14-point opening game in the third set but in the final McNeill hurried into a 4-0 lead against a very tired Kovaleski.

Billy Talbert paired with McNeill to win the men's doubles final defeating Jean Borotra of France and Budge Patty of Los Angeles, Calif., 6-1, 8-6, 9-7.

Pat Todd Beats Gussie for Title

Alexandria, March 25. (AP).—Pat Canning Todd of La Jolla, Calif. defeated Gertrude Moran of Santa Monica, Calif., today, 1-6, 6-3, 6-0, to win the women's singles title in the Alexandria international tennis tourney.

Julian Keene Heads Fight Card Against Sipio Lofton

Sipio Lofton, light heavyweight from New York, will face Washington's Julian Keene in the feature 10-rounder at Turner's Arena tomorrow night.

Lofton was brought in as a replacement for Roland Randall who was slated to meet Keene but was forced to withdraw when he injured his right hand.

The New Yorker is ranked among the top group in his division by Ring magazine and has fought in Madison Square Garden six times during the past 12 months.

Lofton, who entered the pro ranks in 1946, has fought 41 bouts, winning 33, drawing 3 and dropping only 5 decisions. He was defeated once in 1946, twice in 1948 and 1949.

His record includes decisions over Ken Stribling, Chubby Wright, Al Winn, Dewitt Dean and Leo Coleman and will be a big test for his local opponent tomorrow night.

Tomorrow night's show also will feature a five-round semifinal between Eddie Gilchrist, local bantamweight, and Lou Yonkers of Virginia. Gilchrist, who won the national amateur title last year, is making his pro debut.

The card also lists Roy Wirt vs. Ralph Brown, welters, five rounds; Jimmy O'Brien vs. Angelo Marinie, middleweights, four rounds; Lucky Fitzgerald vs. Frank Ball, middles, four, and another four to be announced.

Soph Backs Show Form in Hoya Spring Scrimmage

Two promising sophomores for next year's Georgetown football squad showed a little of it yesterday in the first scrimmage of the 6-day-old spring drills.

Jack O'Mahoney, fleet Pittsburgh back, broke loose for a 65-yard touchdown gallop and Quarterback Clem Rieger, hurt most of his freshman season, threw two scoring passes to End Gus Fornaciari.

Bugs Thompson, with O'Mahoney considered a replacement for Billy Conn, sat out the scrimmage with a pulled leg muscle. Coach Bob Margarita said he was especially pleased with the squad's hustle.

D.C. Recreation Title Play Set

The semifinals and finals of the D. C. Recreation Department's city championships will be held this week in both the major and minor girls' divisions and in the men's combined class. All games will be played at Roosevelt High.

Gordon Young Would Rename Two B Streets

Renaming of B sts. nw. and se as Constitution and Independence aves., respectively, was suggested yesterday by Engineer Commissioner Gordon R. Young.

The streets are extensions of the avenues which flank the Mall. Long-range plans call for extending the Mall eastward from the Capitol to Anacostia Park, General Young said. He feels that the "dignified" names of the avenues should go along with it.

Young said he will recommend the changes to the Board of Commissioners this week. A public hearing would probably be required before action could be taken, he said.

A more immediate prospect than the east Mall is construction of an East Capitol st. bridge. Present plans call for approaches leading into both B sts. Young said this was not his reason for wanting the changes made now—though it was "confusing" at congressional hearings, he said, to keep referring to them as extensions of the avenues.

Young said he would probably not recommend changing the name of that portion of B st. se. on the Anacostia side of the river.

The two B sts. extend 19 blocks east from the Capitol. They are largely residential, but contain a few commercial blocks.

Southern Railway Net Income Shows Gain Over 1949

The gross operating revenues of the Southern Railway Co. in February, were $16,377,046, compared with $17,008,408 in 1949—a decrease of $631,362. Net operating income was $1,667,082, compared with $1,212,854 in 1949. The balance after charges was $741,796 compared with $268,144 in February of last year.

During the first two months of 1950, the gross operating revenues were $34,031,227, as compared with $35,615,030 for the corresponding period of 1949. The road's net operating income for the two months was $3,588,591, as compared with $2,437,373 in 1949, and its balance remaining after charges was $1,715,506, as compared with $525,907 in 1949.

The February net income of the four other principal railroads comprising the Southern System was also reported as follows:

The Cincinnati, New Orleans & Texas Pacific had a net income of $351,790, as compared with $262,609 in 1949; the Alabama Great Southern had a net income of $147,004, compared with $100,577; the New Orleans & Northwestern had a net income of $94,748, compared with $89,693; and the Georgia Southern & Florida had a net income of $28,373, compared with $1685.

Auto Price Tag Gains Favor as Sales Factor

Detroit, March 25 (AP).—Ask an auto owner what he wants most in a new car and he'll tell you: lower prices.

Price tags are becoming increasingly important in car merchandising as the postwar car shortage wanes.

But the prospect for substantially lower prices without the sacrifice of some equipment isn't very good right now. Undoubtedly there will be numerous price revisions between now and the year-end, but they aren't likely to be of sizable proportions, especially among the more popular priced makes.

The postwar car boasts many engineering and styling advances that were absent in 1940 models. So making a true comparison of car prices today with those of the prewar era is difficult.

In dollars and cents today's lowest price models cost about twice what they did a decade ago. But most of today's new car buyers wouldn't be satisfied with a 1940 model. Ten years have brought many improvements.

The advances have made for greater comfort, safety and economy. So to say flatly that a Chevrolet, Ford or Plymouth costs twice as much as it did a decade ago is not strictly accurate.

Probably you don't get many more gadgets than you did 10 years ago. But you do get a much better engine, better brakes, a greatly improved steering mechanism and better tires.

Generally the engine compression ratio is higher. That's important because it improves riding and driving and provides greater fuel economy. Many engines have self-adjusting values. That, too, helps power output.

Steering gear ratios have been increased. Bodies are sturdier. In both instances this means greater safety. More riding and driving comfort result from the lowered center of gravity common to most current models.

Chevrolet Executive Cheered by Outlook

Detroit, March 25 (AP).—Business prospects look better than ever to T. H. Keating, Chevrolet motors general manager.

His company, Keating said, is headed for one of its biggest years, that may even surpass the record-breaking volume of 1949. He made his optimistic statement today as he neared the end of a six weeks tour of major retail automobile markets throughout the country.

Business Outlook

By J. A. Livingston

The Logic Behind Rising Stocks

You could easily pass over, as a happenstance, the current boom in Wall Street—the advance of stock prices to new highs. You could argue it's completely illogical. You could ask: How come stocks should go up when America's diplomatic fortunes throughout the world seem to be slipping to a postwar low? You might even say that just the opposite ought to happen.

Livingston

Yet, America's weakness in the current phase of the cold war may be the basis of Wall Street's strength. It is a maxim among stock speculators that when things seem at their worst, they are sure to take a turn for the better.

Senator McCarthy (R., Wis.) has pulled down the prestige of Secretary of State Acheson and the State Department by his catch-as-catch-can charges of Communists in high places. In Germany, the Russians make as if they might try a "putsch" on Berlin to oust the British, Americans, and French. In Italy, the Commies have caused social disturbances. In Indo-China, the Russians are fomenting an uprising against the French.

The Beginning of a Policy?

The dossier of failure seems so overwhelming that it cannot persist. On the West Coast, Secretary Acheson laid down a seven-point program for ending the cold war. Obviously, Russia won't accede to Acheson's proposals. But at least Acheson has made a beginning and the policy of drifting is ending.

Either Truman or Acheson will chart a program or Congress will try to. The result could well be an increase in military expenditures and foreign aid. If so, Wall Street would be justified in optimism about the business outlook. An increase in such outlays would offset probable declines next year in automobile production and new home construction, and might reverse the downtrend in United States exports (see chart).

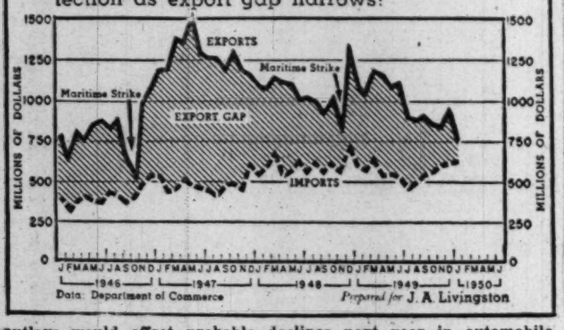
CHALLENGE TO CONGRESS
Will law-makers resist pressure for tariff protection as export gap narrows?



A major change in front, in United States strategy, is probable. Up till now America has tried to lead the world, yet has remained semialoof from it. We have hidden behind the atom bomb. We have assumed that the mere threat of atomic force would curb Russia and would give backbone to western Europe. We have relied on our overwhelming economic strength to deter Russia.

Economics of U. S. vs. U. S. S. R.

This is America's opportunity to demonstrate to the world that we can maintain a high standard of living at home, yet, at the same time, rehabilitate weakened economies abroad, prevent hunger and famine, and supply direct military resources to countries trying to guard themselves against aggression. That's our basic strength. Out of it our foreign policy should flow.

Economically, Russia is no match for this country. We have three times Russia's aluminum capacity; we turn out annually ten times as many cars and trucks, four times as much cement, twice as much coal, four times as much cotton yard goods, five times as much electric power, 400 times as much petroleum, three times as much pig iron, three times as much steel, eight times as many tractors.

Our national income is more than double Russia's by any standard of measurement. And it's quite obvious that America can extend large-scale foreign aid much easier than Russia can. Therefore, in Asia, we should try, whenever and wherever possible, to trade economic wherewithal for loyalty, resources; industrial know-how for political support.

Must Take Frontal Stand

But we cannot act with goods, with material things, alone. We have to be allies, not a sideline cheering section. You can't expect the leader of a movement to stay in the background and let his followers get hurt. They won't follow long. Unless we participate directly in the program to contain communism, we cannot lead it.

The implication is that we may have to deploy United States troops in Europe and Asia to prevent Russian advances. Then Russia will know we mean business. So will our potential allies. To gain the confidence of other countries, the United States must assume the same risks as we ask them to.

We have the resources for such a program. We now need the will, the leadership, and the cohesion to use them. If we do, not only will we build up the strength of the anti-Communist world, but also we will build up our own resources at home. Over-all effect: An expansive business structure, as Wall Street perhaps is betting.

But more than that, by proving we have the will to use our strength, we may convince the men in the Kremlin that it's cheaper to make peace than to wage the cold war.

New York Cotton

New York, March 25 (AP).—Cotton futures in late dealings today overcame early declining tendencies and closed 20 to 35 cents a bale higher.

Short covering for over the weekend was responsible for the late upturn. Late Friday the Senate sent to the White House legislation calling for an increase of 1,200,000 acres in the 1950 cotton acreage goal. This, if approved by President Truman, would make the new cotton acreage goal 22,200,000 acres. Sentiment among many congressional leaders was that the President would approve the legislation.

Early Easter Fails to Spur Sales in D C.

By S. Oliver Goodman

An early Easter has failed so far to stimulate department store sales here.

In the week ended March 18, local dollar volume was reported 6 percent less than in the same 1949 period. For the four weeks ended the same date, store sales here were off 3 percent.

Elsewhere, the earlier Easter apparently has helped sales somewhat. Baltimore reported a 3 percent increase in the week ended March 18, while other cities in the Fifth Reserve District showed a 1 percent gain.

Nationally, the week's sales were 1 percent improved for the week.

Federal Reserve Board economists said the good showing may be due in part to the calendar, which puts the annual Easter shopping season a week ahead of last year. Easter will be on April 9. In 1949, it came on April 17.

The board estimated that this difference in dates should boost sales for this month about 2 percent over March last year and also tend to pull sales volume for next month about 2 percent below April last year.

From another source, Standard & Poor's, came comment that first-half retail trade earnings this year should be favorable in the absence of the heavy markdowns a year ago.

NEW MEMBER: The First Federal Savings and Loan Association of Alexandria has been admitted to membership in the D. C. Building and Loan League and brings to 28 the number affiliated with the organization. Established in 1935, the Virginia institution reports resources of $3,525,824. Officers include Wallace N. Lindsey, president; Charles T. Nicholson, executive vice president; George F. Downham, secretary, and Eugene J. Olmi, treasurer.

APPOINTMENTS: Two major staff appointments to the Printing Industry of America, Inc., national association whose headquarters are in Washington, were announced yesterday. Charles H. Harper has become secretary of the Union Employers Section and Glenn C. Compton will become public relations director on April 3.

We are finding them slowly but surely, and we will continue looking for them until we find our normal staff . . . then we will stop looking.

We reject more men than we accept, our standards are high but if we do accept you, you will be on your way toward at least $10,000 a year. You will be very carefully trained and observed until you are good at it.

YOU CAN MAKE MONEY RIGHT FROM THE VERY FIRST DAY.

The product is most unusual, as you will agree when you see it. It's amazingly versatile and enjoys unprecedented consumer acceptance.

It is because we are a new and expanding organization in Washington that we go hunting for more of the right type of men.

Just one hour of your time will convince you, beyond the shadow of doubt, that the earnings are quite comprehensive and the opportunity magnificent. Our requirements are: that you must be ambitious and willing to work as you have never worked before to attain your ambitions. You should be able to handle other men and show them how it is done. You must have a car and preferably be between the ages 23 and 35. There is no canvassing, you sell by appointment only. Your appointments are made for you.

Right this minute we could use 34 men, several in managerial capacities. No man in our Washington office earns less than $100 weekly and there are many who earn $10,000 yearly and above. If there are any "Doubting Thomases," we'll open the company's books and prove it to you. If there were only one or two up in that bracket we wouldn't mention it, but with so many men with such high earnings, then you should certainly say to yourself, "If they can do it, I can, too."

It will take less than one hour of your time to investigate, to see our product and to hear more about the opportunities and high profitable promotions. For further information, be at

MARYLAND

100 LOVELY rolling acres on Main Blvd.; Wash 30 miles, Baltimore 10; 2 fine frontages, transportation. Write for development. Francis A. Michel, Attorney, U. S. F. & G. Building, Baltimore, Md.

HOW WOULD you like your pockets to jingle by investing in good acreage? I'll give you a brief story of the most successful investor in acreage in the history of Washington. Watch this illustration and you'll see how his pockets jingled. This investor was Mr. Charles C. Glover, the late president of the Riggs National Bank. He bought a large tract of acreage at $200 an acre just south of Chevy Chase Circle when Connecticut ave. was only a proposed avenue. I paid him $3000 an acre for what he paid $2200 an acre. Time shows that I bought it cheaper at $3000 an acre than he bought it at $200 an acre, as one acre of it is land at Connecticut ave. and McKinley is now worth a million dollars. This shows how good acreage will make your pocketbook jingle. I have 500 acres near the Potomac Capital Village, paid $500 for this ground 20 years ago, but now the bridge is open for traffic and this land is cheaper now at $1000 an acre than when I bought it at $500 an acre. This property in the business zone may reach a million dollars an acre some day. If you want your pocketbook to jingle, get busy, get active. Fulton R. Gardiner. Reach me at my home, WO. 0933.

SEE GLEN HILLS where you can get choice home sites for only 2c to 3c per square foot, with easy terms. Information available on planning, financing, building your home. NEXT TO A NEW CAR A CHERNERIZED CAR IS BEST

next to a new car a CHERNERIZED CAR IS BEST...

CHERNERIZED CARS are the world's BIG name, the world's FIRST choice! And with good reason. For once a car has gone through the rigid Chernerizing system, you can be sure it's in top running order from bumper-to-bumper. Yet the FINER performance that comes from this QUALITY extra, doesn't cost you a cent more. When you buy a CHERNERIZED car, you not only get the world's BIG name, but the world's BIG buy too!

When It's April in Washington

No Folks Like Our Folks; And How Busy They'll Be!

By Marie McNair

IT'S BEEN written about, sung about, caricatured and maligned. It's been praised and damned. But still—there's no place like Washington!

Where but in the Capital of the U. S. A. could a Chief of State share the spotlight with a king of fashion? Where, but in this town of ours, are pocketbooks opened to an endless train of flower shows, dog shows, fashion shows and garden tours. And we're a soft touch for charity balls and benefit teas for those worthy institutions which are as much a part of Washington as the Capitol's dome.

Curtain raiser on the spring scene will be the Cherry Blossom Festival which gets off with a bang on Friday. From the 51 State and Territorial princesses, one will be chosen as Cherry Blossom Queen at a reception and supper dance that evening at the Shoreham Hotel. The Queen will reign at the Watergate pageant Saturday and Sunday afternoons and she'll be waltzed around with her princesses to a series of receptions at the Statler, Mayflower and Carlton Hotels.

Easter Sunday, if the weather is with us, will bring out flowered hats to rival the cherry blossoms. Ten of Washington's best dressed women, including Mrs. Dean Acheson, have been asked to judge the Easter paraders on Connecticut ave.

Chile's President Coming

BEFORE the cherry trees have cast their petals into the Potomac, officialdom's red carpet will be unrolled to welcome Chile's President Gabriel Gonzalez-Videla, who is coming to Washington April 12 at the invitation of President Truman.

But wait! That day Christian Dior will be here, too, for the parade of Dior clothes at a huge fashion show luncheon to be put on at the Statler Hotel by the Women's National Democratic Club.

And the very next day, a Cavalcade of Greek Fashions will be shown at the Mayflower Hotel.

April showers may bring May flowers, but April also brings tourists by droves. They'll be pounding the pavements for the benefit Georgetown House Tour Friday and Saturday of this week, and they'll do it all over again on April 8 during the House and Embassy Tour. With gardens bursting into bloom the middle of the month, it will cost you money to glimpse behind the brick-walled gardens of more than a dozen houses, for the annual Georgetown Garden Tour April 15. Then will come the Goodwill House and Embassy Tour on April 22 and, if you haven't had enough, there are the Maryland and Virginia tours, the first from April 28 through May 9, the second opening April 22 and going through April 29.

To Warrenton for Gold Cup

WHERE else to go on April 8? Why to Warrenton, Va., of course, for the twenty-fifth running of the Virginia Gold Cup Races at Broadview, Pete Vogel's estate with its big white house on a hill. There are always packs of parties before and after the race and the famous Gold Cup Hunt Ball usually winds up the day.

If you're dead set on dancing get a ticket (preferably two) for the Navy Relief Ball on Friday, April 14, at the historic old Sail Loft at the Naval Gun Factory. You'll think you're on a South Pacific Island, for that's the theme of the ball, which is given annually to boost a fund which aids families of enlisted men. Film Star Douglas Fairbanks, jr., will be on hand to emcee the show.

The annual stunt party of the Women's National Press Club, at which President and Mrs. Truman will be honor guests, will be held April 15 at the Statler Hotel.

Another April event—revived for the first time in 10 years—is the Bal Boheme of the Arts Club to be put on at the Statler April 17.

Members of the Daughters of the American Revolution will converge on the Capital for their annual convention April 17 to 21.

And the best of breeds will pass in parade at the combined Potomac Boxer Club and Capital Cocker Club dog show on Friday night, April 21, at Fort Myer's post gymnasium. What for? Army Relief, says Mrs. Jouett Shouse, who is president and publicity chairman.

Yes, it's going to be a busy April in this busy Capital.

IN THE embassy's yellow drawing room, Mme. Dendramis puffs a cigarette before going to a dinner with the Ambassador. Her gown is black net, designed by Desses

FROM 8:30 till lunch time, Mme. Dendramis, wife of the Greek Ambassador, is in her sunny study, making phone calls, taking phone calls, going over countless benefit lists. Biggest current job is directing the Washington Cavalcade of Greek Fashions, to be staged at the Mayflower, April 13

Chic Mme. Dendramis Wins Honors in Fashion, Charity, and Canasta

It's Greek to Others How She Does So Much

By Elizabeth Maguire

ONE of the busiest women in Washington, Madame Dendramis, wife of the Greek Ambassador, is noted for her charm and chic. As chatelaine of the Greek Embassy, she is a gracious hostess; as chairman of benefit committees, she is quick and efficient; and as a canasta player, she is one of the best in town.

Her happy home, her successful parties, her lovely appearance are by-products of hard work. Her days begin at 7:30 and she has a slim figure because she skips all meals except dinner. At 8 o'clock she is at her desk, keeping appointments and making and taking telephone calls.

A cup of coffee for breakfast, a glass of fruit juice for lunch, "anything I like for dinner" she finds keep her going very well.

"Besides, I dash all over the place," she adds.

Assembles Layette For Newcomer

SHE is concentrating now on the Cavalcade of Greek Fashions which is coming to town April 13. In the midst of fashion chats last week, she received an SOS for a layette. A new member of the Greek-American colony, she was told, is due in Washington any day. At once, dresses were boxed, and attention switched to sweaters, booties, and bonnets. Now a future Greek-American has a complete spring wardrobe.

Madame Dendramis has won laurels as chairman of the Cavalcade of Greek Fashions. Every reservation for that event has been completely booked for over three weeks.

The show was officially opened in Athens by King Paul and Queen Frederika on March 13 and 14, and it is now on the high seas headed for Washington. After its premiere here, it will tour the United States and wind up in Paris.

The Washington show will be held at the Mayflower. Mrs. Truman will be honor guest at Mme. Dendramis' table, which will include Mrs. Alben Barkley, Mrs. Fred Vinson, Mrs. Dean Acheson, Mrs. Cordell Hull, and Mrs. Henry F. Grady, wife of our Ambassador to Greece, who has been working with Queen Frederika in assembling the collection of historic and modern costumes. The Ambassador of Greece will have as his guest the Chief of Naval Operations, Admiral Forrest Sherman.

Royal Court Singer Coming for Concert

ANOTHER pending event at the Greek Embassy is a visit from Elena Nikolaidi, royal court singer, who is coming to Washington to give a concert at Constitution Hall on April 3. The Ambassador and Mme. Dendramis will be ranking guests at a reception following the concert at the home of the Assistant Secretary of State and Mrs. George McGhee.

Still another April date is the Goodwill Embassy Tour on April 22, for which Mme. Dendramis will open the Greek Embassy to the public. All these events and many others require hours of writing notes, keeping appointments, attending meetings, making and taking telephone calls, going to teas and luncheons, smiling and dressed with appropriate chic.

In entertaining, Mme. Dendramis takes top place. Parties at the Greek Embassy are attended with real enjoyment by generals, admirals, diplomats and old friends as well as new. The fire on the hearth is just a symbol of the warmth supplied by a happy home, a generous and kind hostess, and a spirit of genuine hospitality.

Silver plates gleam brightly against the dark paneling in the dining room, the yellow drawing room has inviting little groups of French chairs, and the comfortable library often accommodates as many as 100 guests.

Some of the best meals in town are cooked by the embassy's Greek chef. His little daughter, who has the run of the embassy, was born the day the Ambassador arrived in Washington and was named "Mary" after the Ambassadress.

Born in Egypt, Grew Up There

MME. DENDRAMIS was born in Egypt of Greek parents, and she grew up there. She was always much at home in that country, as many Greeks live there. Alexandria, she points out, is an ancient Greek colony, and today it is full of Greek businessmen.

Educated at the Sacred Heart Convent in Cairo, Madame Dendramis speaks Greek, French, Spanish, and, she says, "the English that you hear." She adds that she has forgotten a little Arabic.

She met Vassili G. Dendramis when he was serving as Greek Minister to Egypt, and they were married later in Buenos Aires, when the envoy was Minister to the Argentine.

During the war years, Madame Dendramis remained with her husband in Buenos Aires, returning to Greece for one year in 1945 when her husband was a member of the Cabinet. In 1946 the Ambassador was made permanent representative in the UN, and in 1947 he came to Washington as chief of mission.

Bookbinding is her hobby. "I adore also golf," she says, "which I never play here because I have no time." She remembers going to a golf club once, bag in hand, prepared for an afternoon on the links. But she met a group of committee-women and they spent the next few hours deep in talk of a forthcoming benefit.

This is the twenty-first in a series of articles on embassy homes, hosts and hostesses.

ON her way to a luncheon, Mme. Dendramis drops by the Ambassador's office, adjoining the second floor library. When she lunches at home, the Ambassadress squeezes some fruit juice or vegetable juice for herself and the Ambassador. On the many occasions when she is a luncheon guest, however, she eats what's put before her

On Spring Pilgrimage

Listen for the Rustle Of History's Petticoats In Maryland's Mansions

By Sonia Stein

LISTEN for the rustle of petticoats and the clanking of swords when you go through the old Maryland houses which will be open to the public during the Maryland House and Garden Pilgrimage April 28 through May 9.

Listen for the sighs of one Matthias Hammond who was jilted by his fiancee for giving too much attention to the building of what is now known as Hammond-Harwood House. The house, designed by William Buckland, has been called the most perfect example of Georgian architecture in America, and is said to have one of the most beautiful doors in America. Built in 1774, the house has been restored as a museum, with funds raised through previous Maryland Garden Pilgrimages, and is among the houses to be shown April 28, 10 a. m. to 6 p. m.

And just north of Annapolis in Whitehall, listen for the resigned sighs of Gov. Horatio Sharpe, who built the house as an official summer residence about 1764, half in hope that it would help win the hand of Miss Mary Ogle, Annapolis' reigning belle. Governor Sharpe lost Miss Ogle to his young secretary, John Ridout, but evidently bore him no ill will since he bequeathed the house to him. Whitehall, with its famous Corinthian portico overlooking the water and handsome boxwood garden, will also be open on April 28.

Same Brand Tea at Boston Party

Mary Haworth's Mail

Devoted Mother, Always Close to Daughter, Is Shocked to Find Hints of Indiscretion In Young Man's Love Letters; What to Do?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: In all circles today we parents are advised how to bring up our children. Always we are told that we are to blame for their mistakes.

I have a sweet daughter whom I love very much. She is a senior in high school, very well liked, pretty and a joy to have at home. We have been very close and I have been broadminded, fair and trusting with her, I think.

John is her boy friend. He is a handsome lad, now in college, and I would say above average mentally. He and Betty were only kids when they started to go steady, and he will not be of age to marry for two years more. To all appearances they make a fine couple, and I am sure John loves her. He calls for her, takes her to his home and she is always welcome there.

Mother and Man Hostile Now

HOWEVER, the problem is that a short time ago I came across some letters Betty had from John. I did not look to pry, as I had too much faith to expect anything more than mushy love talk, but the nature of the contents was such that I cried. When I discussed this with Betty, she said "Don't worry; we're not fools."

Must I sit back and wait for the inevitable to happen? Or should I talk with John or his parents? Will I lose my child's love if I do? Knowing that I know about the letters, John is very uneasy around me, and I cannot be anything but cool to him; therefore they spend most of their time at his folks now. It is my impression (perhaps I'm wrong) that he acts to me independent, smug and very sure of himself. I want what is best for them, but I am very worried. Please advise me. V. F.

Factors in Children's Behavior

DEAR V. F.: Parents are praised or blamed for their children's conduct on the theory that children's behavior is created and shaped up gradually in terms of response to, and imitation of the parents' handling of intimate human relations.

Obviously, a child in helpless early formative years has no control of, nor resistance against, influences which sink deeply into his unconscious, where the dynamics of behavior are germinated. And it seems to me that this sort of thing has a bearing on Betty's loyal tolerance of undue familiarity from John in the name of love.

You call her a sweet daughter whom you love very much, and you say that you've always been very close to her. From this I infer that she's been conditioned to maintain no emotional reserve, no private independence of being, in relation to you. And unfortunately, that too "close" filial bias, if carried into adolescence, involuntarily affects a girl's reactions to a valued sweetheart's presumptions. As with her mother, so with him—she behaves involuntarily as if she hadn't an inherent inalienable right to maintain reserve without forfeiting tender acceptance.

Parental Probe May Curb Folly

THERE IS NOTHING praiseworthy about psychological closeness to one's child simply as an end in itself. Constructive closeness consists in intimacy of understanding that is used as a medium of fostering the child's development towards strong self reliant equilibrium and eventual emancipation from parental tutelage. And such awareness may always be reopened in after-years between the two, in terms of ripening friendship and non-possessive devotion.

I believe your mistake has been in making closeness to Betty an end in itself, and that you are specially disturbed, therefore, by indications that John has influence that undermines yours. If your maternal purpose throughout had been to give her inner competence and security, you would have reacted to the contents of the letter in a directly friendly courageous way, using that tone to inform the youngsters of your grave concern about their blundering. Both would have respected that attitude and might have profited from resultant counsel.

Your silent pouting at John, who knows what's on your mind, is so childish that it's no wonder he reacts with bravado—half uneasy, half defiant. You certainly should talk to him; but for good effect, you should speak from seasoned personal maturity, and that you haven't got. All things considered, maybe you'd better confer with his parents, not blaming John more than Betty, however, —and a general probe of the dangerous undertow may cause the youngsters to behave discreetly. M. H.

WCTU Expects 75 Delegates To Conference

Seventy-five out-of-town delegates are expected at the mid-year executive meeting of the Virginia Woman's Christian Temperance Union at the Central Methodist Church of Arlington, March 29-30. Meetings open to the public begin with a dinner March 29, followed by a new moving picture "The Vicious Circle," shown by Miss Emma Watts. Addresses will be given by Mrs. Alexander Stewart, of Washington, national WCTU director of legislation, and by Evangelist Dale Crowley.

The Thursday session will begin at 9:30 a. m. with addresses by Mrs. H. W. Phillips of Richmond, state president; Mrs. Amy Weech of Washington, honorary president; Mrs. J. Roy Jarrett of Norfolk, vice president; Mrs. Lillian Shepherd of London Bridge, corresponding secretary; Mrs. R. W. Lowe of Chester, recording secretary, and Mrs. L. T. Corell of Portsmouth, treasurer.

Mrs. L. N. Morscher, Arlington County WCTU president, will extend greetings and Mrs. S. E. Parker of Newport News, will respond. Devotional services through the day will be led by Mrs. R. A. Justis of Chester, Mrs. Guy S. Glossbrenner, president of the District WCTU, and by the Rev. F. H. Strieby of Del Ray Methodist Church, Alexandria, and the Rev. George H. Yount, of First Presbyterian Church of Arlington. The luncheon speaker will be Miss Sara Palmer, national WCTU field secretary. She will be guest at a tea given by Mrs. Charles S. Payne and Miss Anna Payne at Altha Hall, April 1.

India Edwards Slated to Speak At B'nai B'rith Fete

India Edwards, executive director of the women's division of the Democratic National Party, will be guest speaker at the second annual spring luncheon of the Independence Chapter 641, B'nai B'rith. The luncheon will take place Wednesday, April 19, 1950, at 12:30 p. m. at the Statler Hotel.

Another highlight of the afternoon will be a fashion show presented by Erlebacher, Inc.

Chairman of the luncheon this year is Mrs. Bertram R. Abramson. Her cochairmen are Mrs. Harold Bobys, Mrs. Wolfe Filderman, Mrs. Burton Ostrow and Mrs. Irving Schlossenberg. President of the chapter is Mrs. Maurice Goldberg.

A tea for hostesses at the luncheon tables will be held March 28 at the home of Mrs. Ostrow. The Independence Chapter, organized 2½ years ago, is one of the city's newest B'nai B'rith groups and has a membership of nearly 300.

Put on Your Easter Topcoat To Shine in the Style Parade

Dimitri Wolkonsky

FROM Paris to Washington comes this dapper tuxedo-jacket suit from the French collection of Designer Christian Dior. Fashioned of pin-check wool, it has straight skirt, slit at one side, and fitted jacket that flares sharply beneath the waistline. Crisp, white weskit is recommended note with both New York and Paris stylists. From the collection of imports at Pasternak's

By Peggy Preston

EASTER MORN, dawning o an early April Sunday, will demand its pound of wool.

If Washington weather plays its customary tune this year, a gal will need a coat or suit (and maybe both) in order to be both warm and winsome in the Easter parade.

But, actually, this early Easter is playing right into the hands of the ladies. It is providing them with an excellent excuse to look over the new spring woolens. And this is just the year to do so.

For not in a long while have women's tastes been catered to so comprehensively in the realm of coats and suits. A coat can be anything this season, from a fitted bolero to a flared great-coat. The hemline can waver up in front, down in back; sleeves can stop at the elbow or fasten around the wrist; collars can be huge or nonexisten

Slim Suit Skirt Is Top Choice

IN THE SUIT division, the sl skirt prevails, but the pleate peg-top and gored versions ar equally good. These are boun to be the choice of all but t most slim, trim miss.

Jackets play as many trick as the topcoats. They, too, ca range from bolero to three-quarter length. Most popula length is about four inches below the waistline. With softly rounded shoulders (shoulder pads have been toned down considerably) the majority of the jackets are fitted. But in second place are the boxy types, straight in front, flared in back, and topped off with little boy collars and ties.

A touch of white will distinguish a brand new coat or suit on Easter. Stylists in both New York and Paris appear to be intrigued with the idea of sprinkling costumes with pieces of snowy white trim.

Touch of White Wins Approval

DIOR HAS a great fancy for white trim. It pops up everywhere in his collection, and in the case of his tuxedo front suits, a starched weskit is as necessary as the suit itself.

American designers are all recommending the touch of white. Some merely line the edge of a stand-up collar with it. Others use it for buttons, belt, a cape collar. Pauline Trigere makes an entire flying bolero jacket of white linen, trims collar and cuffs with black velvet.

Lightweight gabardines, tweeds and tissue wools are the fabrics most widely available in Washington, and one may see them in solid or figured patterns. Checks (tiny ones) are being highly touted as the best for spring, but as the season wears on the plain colors will become more and more popular.

Of these colors, the ranking ones seem to be in the "Sun" section of the color card. These are the yellows, ranging from pale beige to orange. Then, there are the neutrals, such as gray, sand, toast beige and mocha, as good this year as they have been in the past and will be in the future. Nor has navy lost any of its flavor. Black alone seems to have its nose a bit out of joint as spring descends colorfully on Washington.

NEWEST note in Washington's Easter parade will be a coat that is caped rather than sleeved. This one, of feather-weight oxford gray flannel, can substitute as a coat-dress. Fitted at the waistline, and buttoned with silver buttons, it has jutting pockets at the hipline, and a tiny capelet effect instead of traditional sleeves.

CHECKS are the smartest currency for 1950's spring. At the left, a woolen fabric, in black and white check pattern, is made up into a full-length spring costume coat. Newsworthy style items of the garment include the soft shoulder lines, batwing sleeves, small shawl collar and belted silhouette. Available at Peck & Peck's

Tobe Says...

New Shoulder Bags Are More Comfortable

So many women are devoted to shoulder bags that they insist on wearing them all the time, whether it's the fashion or not! And rightly so—because if you like something and are comfortable with it, that's the best reason in the world for wearing it.

But perennial fashions of this sort must follow the prevailing mode in order to stay smart. I'm glad to say that our top American bag makers have given an entirely new look to shoulder bags this spring. These are now smaller, much softer, and slightly dressy instead of strictly utilitarian.

Biggest change of all, however, lies in shorter straps, so that the smartest new shoulder bags really come just under the arm and can be hugged tightly when walking.

MRS. WELLINGTON R. HOWARD
. . . married yesterday

Declaration Signer's Descendant Weds In Arlington, Va.

The marriage of Mrs. Lellie Davison Merritt to Wellington R. Howard took place yesterday afternoon at the Clarendon Presbyterian Church, Arlington, Va., with the Rev. Isaac Steenson officiating.

The bride is the daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Fontaine Davison of Arlington and the bridegroom is the son of the late Mr. and Mrs. Walter T. Howard.

The bride's son, Hobart W. Merritt, gave her in marriage. She wore pale blue marquisette over taffeta and carried pink roses. Miss Lois Howard, the bridegroom's daughter, was maid of honor, and Fontaine L. Merritt, another son of the bride, served as best man. The ushers were William Duffy and Clyde Pinkston. On return from their honeymoon in Miami Beach, Fla., the newlyweds will live in Arlington.

Mrs. Howard is descended from Robert Morris, colonial financier and signer of the Declaration of Independence. Mr. Howard studied engineering at the Franklin Institute, Boston, Mass.

Rings On Their Fingers

Announcement is made by Ernst Myron Henning of Albemarle, N. C., of the engagement of his daughter, Mary Ann, to Alfred Preston Moore of Blacksburg and Orange, Va., son of Mrs. William Poindexter Moore and the late Mr. Moore.

The wedding will take place in early May in Albemarle.

Miss Henning, daughter of the late Mrs. Laura Hearne Henning, is a graduate of the Woman's College of the University of North Carolina. A former WAVE officer, she also attended the University of Geneva in Switzerland; the Sorbonne in Paris and the Columbia University Graduate School. She has been employed in Washington by the Economic Cooperation Administration.

Mr. Moore, a former Marine Corps major, was assistant secretary in the office of the late Senator Carter Glass. He attended Woodberry Forest School in Orange, Va., and was graduated from Washington and Lee University. He spend three years as a pilot with the China National Aviation Corporation.

Grau—Simon

Mr. and Mrs. Jack Blau announce the engagement of Mrs. Blau's sister, Miss Gloria Norma Grau, to Louis Simon, son of Mrs. Morris Simon and the late Mr. Simon.

The wedding will take place during Easter week.

Consolo—Di Benedetto

The engagement of Miss Mary C. Consolo to Saverio Di Benedetto, son of Mrs. Frances Di Benedetto and the late John Di Benedetto, is announced by her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Concetto Consolo. The wedding is planned for June.

Lukens—Brigham

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Lee Lukens of Arlington announce the engagement of their daughter, Marion Adele, to Lieut. George Allen Brigham, USMC, son of Walter E. Brigham of Shrewsbury, Mass.

Miss Lukens attended Harcum Junior College, Bryn Mawr, Pa., and was graduated from the Philadelphia Textile Institute, Philadelphia, Pa. She is associated with the Office of the Quartermaster General in Washington.

Lieutenant Brigham attended the University of Massachusetts. He is attending the Marine Corp Aviation Technical School at Quantico, Va.

The couple will be married on April 22 at the home of the bride, after which they will leave for El Toro, Calif. where Lieutenant Brigham will be stationed.

Salzberg—Horwitz

Mr. and Mrs. Edward Salzberg announce the engagement of their daughter, Ruth, to Harvey Horwitz, son of Mr. and Mrs. Herman Horwitz.

The bride-elect is attending George Washington University. Her fiance, a graduate of George Washington University, is attending the Pennsylvania State College of Optometry where he is a member of Phi Alpha and Omicron Delta Epsilon fraternities. The wedding is planned for August 20.

Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., to Emcee at Navy Relief Ball

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS, JR., Naval Reserve officer and actor, will be master of ceremonies at the Navy Relief Ball April 14 in the Sail Loft of the Navy Gun Factory.

The screen star recently returned from Europe where he has been serving as chairman of CARE.

Highlight of the ball's entertainment will be a condensed version of "South Pacific" with Fairbanks narrating.

Other Performers Due

OTHER top performers in the adaptation of the Broadway hit will be Peggy LeBaron, musical comedy star and night club chanteuse, and Jeane Warner, television songstress.

Mrs. LeBaron, who entertained at servicemen's hospitals, USO's and canteens during the war, is the wife of Robert LeBaron, chairman of the Military Liaison Committee of the Atomic Energy Committee. Miss Warner, producer of her own television show, has been guest soloist on several Navy Band coast-to-coast broadcasts.

'South Pacific' Condensation

LIEUT. COMDR. HARRY ALLENDORFER, USN, is writing and producing the condensed version of "South Pacific," and First Class Musician Matt Hynes of the Navy Band, is handling the special musical arrangements.

Floor committee for the Relief Ball includes Lieut. Comdr. Robert W. Hayler, jr., USN, chairman; Comdr. William C. F. Robards, USN; Comdr. A. Bruce Johnson, USN; Lieut. Col. Robert F. Scott, USMC; Lieut. Comdr. Martin J. Mulderrig, jr., USN; Lieut. Comdr. William H. Hudgins, USN; Lieut. Comdr. Edward H. Winslow, USN.

'Snowbaby' to Speak at Washington Club

Marie Peary Stafford, author and lecturer, will speak on "Keeping House in Greenland" at a meeting of the Washington Club at 11 a. m. Tuesday.

Mrs. Stafford, daughter of Robert E. Peary, discoverer of the North Pole, was born in Greenland in 1893. She is known as "The Snowbaby" and is the most northerly-born white child in the world. Before she was ten she had made four trips into the Arctic region and had spent the winter of 1899-1900 in Ellesmere Land.

In 1932 she headed the Peary Memorial Expedition to Greenland and has been honored by many governments for her geographic activities.

"The Snowbaby's Own Story" is one of several books she has written. Her home is in Washington.

Corsages, Blossoms Star at Flower Show

ALL THE BLOSSOMS at the National Flower Show are not confined to the booths. Some of the prettiest flowers of all are being worn by the patronesses of this twenty-sixth annual show conducted by the Society of American Florists and Ornamental Horticulturists.

Mrs. Charles Brannan, wife of the Secretary of Agriculture, who was patroness on the opening day, wore a large orchid shading from pinkish-lavender to deep purple tones, and carried a huge bouquet of Golden Scepter roses, presented to her at the exhibit. Mrs. Harold Burton, wife of the Supreme Court Justice, who is honorary vice chairman of the show, also wore an orchid as she officially opened the show by snipping a white ribbon across the entrance doors promptly at 2 p. m. on Thursday.

Friday's patroness, Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt Whitney, wife of the Undersecretary of Commerce, wore a spray of green and brown orchids on her suit of wood-beige and brown.

Yesterday, Mrs. Tom Clark, wife of the Supreme Court Justice, wore pink camellias—as befits a lady from Texas—to serve as patroness.

Today's patroness, Mrs. Jesse M. Donaldson, wife of the Postmaster General, has yet to see what kind of flowers she'll be presented with but there is no shortage to choose from at the show! Patronesses for Monday and Tuesday are Mrs. Patrick J. Hurley and Mrs. Dwight Davis.

Although Mrs. Truman has not yet attended the show, she has sent her personal representative—a beautiful arrangement of pale yellow roses and blue delphinium from the White House greenhouses, with a card of congratulations and good wishes.

The show, at the National Guard Armory, is open daily from 10 a. m. to 10 p. m. and will run through Wednesday.

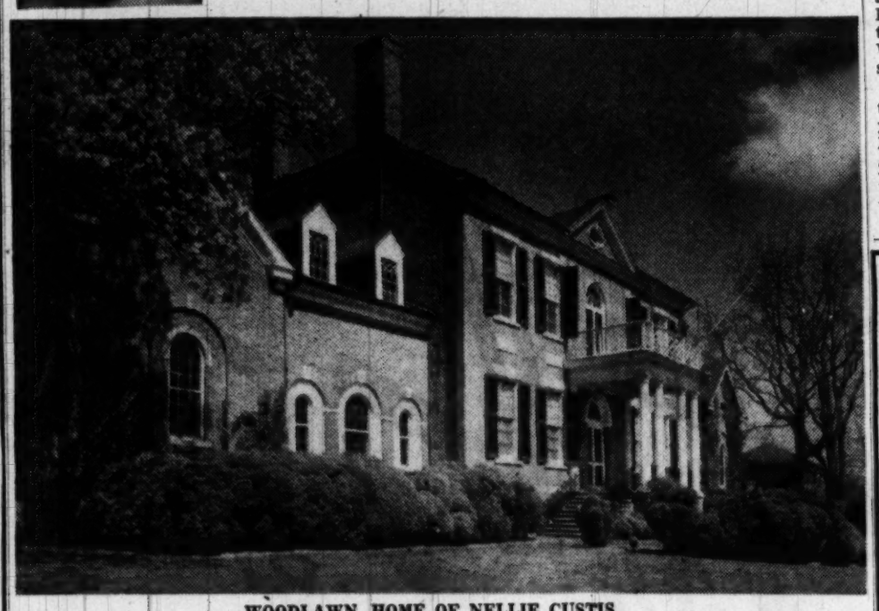
Metropolitan Antiques To Furnish Woodlawn

By Ellen Buell Parry



WOODLAWN, HOME OF NELLIE CUSTIS
. . . Bare look relieved by furniture from Metropolitan Museum

THE Metropolitan Museum of New York, which houses the most celebrated collection of early American furniture in the world, has agreed to help furnish Woodlawn, one of Virginia's greatest historic shrines.

Jubilant Mrs. George Maurice Morris released this good news by long-distance telephone after a conference with Vincent Andrus, curator of the famed American Wing. Mrs. Morris and Miss Nancy McClelland made the trip to New York earlier this week for the express purpose of arranging the loan, which will bring South, for 'as long as necessary,' antiques of tremendous beauty and value.

The museum will lend Woodlawn a complete eighteenth century living-room set, as well as many pieces for other rooms. Another loan of furnishings to refit the dining-room is being made by George Livingston Williams. Fourteen Duncan Phyfe chairs are the gift of Mrs. Yale Stevens of Rye, N. Y.

This news is particularly good to members of the Woodlawn Foundation who have had a race against time to furnish the bare rooms of Woodlawn by Virginia Garden Week, beginning April 22. The Woodlawn Foundation hopes to collect and own its furnishings eventually. However, $82,000 must be raised first to free the estate from debt. A drive to that end is on now, with Gen. Thomas Holcomb, USMC (Ret.) as chairman.

Woodlawn was originally part of George Washington's Mount Vernon estate. In 1799, on the occasion of Nellie Custis' marriage to Lawrence Lewis, Washington's military aide and nephew, George Washington gave the site to his adopted daughter, Nellie, granddaughter of Martha Washington. The mansion, designed by William Thornton, architect of the United States Capitol building, was built shortly after Washington's death.

MISS NANCY McCLELLAND

MRS. GEORGE MAURICE MORRIS

THIS happened sometime ago, but the story is still told of the time that Charlie and Hannah Howze, whose place, Woodbourne, is on the Potomac about a mile above Chain Bridge, were having a small cocktail party. Charlie telephoned Hannah, just before coming home, and said an old University of Virginia classmate had come to town; that he was bringing him home to spend the night.

The next morning, Charlie left the house early to go to the hospital. The houseguest, in no hurry, stayed on and talked to Hannah for awhile. "Hannah," he said, "I should think Charlie would be afraid to leave an attractive wife like you way out here by yourself all day." "Well," said Hannah, "I can't think of any place I'd be safer than right here in the country."

Hardly had she finished the sentence before there was a knock at the door. The houseman opened it, and Edward Campion (Ted) Acheson, with a large armful of flowers, burst into the living room, knelt at Hannah's knee, kissed her hand, and said, "Darling, these flowers are for you."

Hannah knew—the houseguest did not—that Ted and Elizabeth Acheson had accepted an invitation to the party the evening before, but hadn't showed up. Ted, by way of apology, had dropped by on his way to town to "say it with flowers."

Dwight Eisenhower To Be Guest Speaker

Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower, president of Columbia University, will address the combined Columbia University Alumni Clubs of the Washington area at a dinner meeting at the Statler Hotel at 6:45 p. m. on March 30.

Cooperating in plans are Katharine Hall, president, Columbia University Alumnae Club, and Kathleen R. Clift, president, Barnard College Club. Reservations should be sent to Hugo E. Weinberger, treasurer, 3106 Quesada st. nw., Washington.

During the event, which marks the first time in more than 20 years that a Columbia president has addressed a Washington alumni group, General Eisenhower will speak on "Looking Ahead With Courage and Confidence."

Barkleys Will Be Honor Guests

Vice President and Mrs. Alben Barkley will be honor guests at the Author's Breakfast which will open the 1950 Biennial Convention of the National League of American Pen Women on April 1. The opening event of the five-day session will be held at the Statler Hotel at noon. Music will be furnished by the United States Marine Band Orchestra.

Following the breakfast, Madame Pandit, Ambassador from India to the United States, will receive delegates and alternates at 4 p. m. at the embassy.

Dr. Margaret Hayes Sebree, national president of the League, will be honored at a reception Saturday evening in the presidential ballroom of the Statler.

Georgetown Will Share History, Beauty

HOME OF BRIG. GEN. AND MRS. PHILIP B. FLEMING
. . . artistic doorway at 1554 34th st. nw.

THE BENJAMIN W. THORON HOME
. . . twin chimneys at 2900 N st. nw.

GEORGETOWN, with its handsome houses and Eighteenth Century atmosphere, is often referred to as Washington's "happiest residential district." Typical are the house fronts with their fine doorways, gabled windows and ironwork porch railings.

Many of the magnificent old houses dating back to the days when Georgetown was a great shipping center have been restored to their colonial grandeur. Small houses have been rebuilt to preserve their historical past; now and then a modern house challenges its elders.

Next Friday and Saturday, from 2 to 6 p. m., 16 houses are to be open, through the courtesy of their owners, for the annual Georgetown House Tour which brings thousands of visitors interested in Georgetown showplaces and their treasures. Among these is the home of Representative and Mrs. James W. Wadsworth, jr., at 3263 N st., a fine example of Federal architecture. One of a row known to old residents as King's Row, its spacious rooms are filled with treasures, many of which belonged to Mrs. Wadsworth's father, the late John Hay.

The Director of the National Gallery of Art and Mrs. David E. Finley are opening their house at 3318 O st. The doorway, one of the oldest in Georgetown, certainly one of the most beautiful Colonial doors in America, was brought from Salem, Mass., and dates back to proud clipper days.

Tea is to be served in the Parish Hall of St. John' Episcopal Church, 3240 O st., from 3:30 to 5:30 p. m. both days of the tour. Entire proceeds go to the maintenance of the social welfare department of the church.

Party. The Peggy Stewart House, of red brick, will also be open the first day of the tour.

There should be a whisper of literary portent about the Old White House at Charlotte Hall School in St. Mary's County, which will be open April 29. The house with its gambrel roof has been the continuous meeting place of one of the oldest literary groups in the county, The Washington-Stonehall Society.

And listen for the click of the ghostly telegraph key in Cambria, Baltimore County home overlooking Loch Raven. Built in 1752, the stone building later housed the first telegraph station for Baltimore County. Cambria will be open May 6.

And cock an ear for the melancholy howl of the blue dog who roamed the hills around Rose Hill in Charles County, warning of impending disaster. And maybe you can hear the whispers of Miss Olivia Floyd of Rose Hill, who was rumored to be a Confederate spy. The house, built about 1730 and now being restored, is famous for its beautifully carved mantels and woodwork, and the magnificent boxwood hedges. Rose Hill will be open April 30.

Must Have Been Democrats There

THERE might be the clop-clop of mules' feet ringing in Prospect Hall in Frederick County (open May 7) because someone once drove a team of mules in there and turned it around to prove that the huge center hall was big enough for such a performance. Built about 1732, Prospect Hall has massive walls to withstand the onslaught of warring Indians.

Landon, near Urbana in Frederick County, still has on its walls the names and some sketches of wounded men cared for there following a skirmish with General McClellan's advance guard. The men, members of Gen. J. E. B. Stuart's forces, had been interrupted as they were giving a ball in Landon. The house was constructed—or reconstructed—in 1846 from carefully marked pieces brought from a site on the Rappahannock River, near Fredericksburg, Va., by boat and by oxcart.

And what of the laughter and the tears in Bloomingdale? There Miss Sallie Harris held court for wealthy admirers from all over the State. The belle of the Eastern Shore, Miss Harris flirted lightly with too many beaux and ended her days as a recluse and a local "character." Bloomingdale, in Queen Anne's County, is known for its carving and mantels, too. Parts of the house, to be open May 4, date back to 1660.

Mutiny Rings In Memory's Ear

THE halls of Rigbie House in Harford County (open May 2) may still ring with the sounds of a mutiny among Lafayette's men as they were enroute to Yorktown. The mutiny was quelled after an officers' council at Rigbie.

The houses have treasures to offer as well as history. Many of them are virtually museums of Colonial art and furniture making and of exquisite pieces imported from abroad.

The home at 100 E. Witherspoon rd., in the Baltimore area (open May 1) contains a dining table which President Van Buren used in the White House to seat parties of 30 people. Lowestoft china inherited through Gov. William Bradford, first Governor of Plymout County, is also on display in this home of French Eighteenth Century architecture.

Kernewood, also in that area, also has a famous collection of antiques as does Edgewood at 911 W. Lake ave.

The gardens at Tyrconnel, Woodbrook lane, are inspired by the formal gardens at Villa d'Este in Italy. This is also in the vicinity of Baltimore and will be open May 1.

De Le Brooke Manor, built in 1830, is on the site of the home originally provided by Robert Brooke in 1650 for his wife, 10 children and 28 servants! Located in St. Mary's County, it will open April 29.

Great Opportunity For Keyhole Talk

HABRE DE VENTURE, built about 1742, is in the shape of an arc, and consists of three separate parts, each an example of a different kind of Colonial Maryland architecture. In Charles County, the house will be open April 30. Also open that day will be La Grange, built in 1763 by Dr. James Craik, Surgeon General of the Continental Army and a close friend of George Washington. Both front and rear doors have the same huge locks and keys that fastened them almost two centuries ago.

Mount Republic, built in 1792, has walls of English brick two-and-a-half feet thick, beautiful front and rear doors with identical fanlights, and an unusual frieze.

There's a Tulip Hill in Anne Arundel County, to be open April 28. Noted for its fine proportions and classic portico with Cupid on the pediment, the house (built in 1756) stands among ancient trees, many of them tulip poplars, from which the name was taken.

Larkin's Hundred, built in 1704, was later called O'Hara's Castle. But the present owners have changed the name of this Anne Arundel County house back to the original name, rich with the ring of landowner's pride.

Tantalizing Names Tempt the Tourist

THERE'S a Vesper Hill near Baltimore (open May 1) and in Cecil County (where homes will be open May 2) such tantalizing names as Mount Ararat Farms—high above the Susquehanna River, and Octoraro Hundred which was visited by General Lafayette during the Revolutionary War.

In nearby Harford County, where the houses are also to be open May 2, are The Vineyard, now in possession of the seventh generation descendants of James Preston, and Medical Hall, built by the first doctor to graduate in America, which still has some of the original early Nineteenth Century paper on its walls.

Kent County, where houses will be open May 3, has a house called The Reward, and another one called Comegys Bight House.

In Talbot County where houses will be open May 5, there is famous Wye Oak, the largest white oak in America (28 feet around, 95 feet high and spreading 165 feet) which is said to be 400 years old. It can be reached either through Queen Anne's County or Talbot County. Troth's Fortune in Talbot County, where houses will be open May 5, is one of the oldest homes in the county.

Fortunately Flour Was Cheaper Then

THERE'S a Watercress Farm in Frederick County, (where houses will be open May 7) built entirely from material on the farm. Bricks were baked there and trees felled for the woodwork by such a collection of workmen that it is said to have taken a barrel of flour a day for bread to feed them.

Worthington Valley in Baltimore County, where houses will be open May 8, has a Berry Hill, a Melinda and a Melinda's Prospect. Hayfields, built about 1800, will be open for the first time this year. The estate dates back earlier than 1800 and the owner, Colonel Nicholas Bosley, was presented a tankard by General Lafayette for having the best cultivated farm of that time.

The Manor, where houses will be open May 9, has a Fancy Hill Farm, a Hope Farm—which has a number of famous sporting paintings — and a Game Cock Farm. At nearby Pleasant Valley Farm are hedges considered to be among the finest examples of topiary art in America. Topiary art means fancy hedge-cutting, in case you didn't know.

Montgomery County, where houses will be open May 9, has an estate called Ishpiming, with Beauvais tapestries, and collection of figurines. There's a No Gain and Tumblestone Farm (occupied by the Headmaster of Landon School) and a Ziegler's Choice.

The Harford County tour takes the visitor through famous horse-breeding country where the rolling farmlands are sometimes considered "excruciatingly neat." Havre de Grace in that county missed by two votes becoming Capital of the United States—and became instead, one of the racing centers of the world.

There's a My Lord's Gift in Queen Anne's County and a Mt. Airy in Prince Georges County (with garden designed by Major L'Enfant who laid out the pattern of Washington). In Baltimore County there's a Pot Springs and a Goodfellowship.

In Harford County there's a place called The Mill, one of the few remaining pre-Revolutionary stone grist mills, with a millrace winding through plantings of narcissus, Judas and dogwood trees, wild azaleas and water iris. It's a beautiful site on which to have a picnic and the owners of The Mill cordially invite all tour pilgrims to use the picnic grounds by the mill race.

If Queen Bess Put You Below the Salt, You Didn't Amount to Much; Table Setting Still Offers Problems

TIME WAS when the biggest problem in table setting was where to put the salt cellar.

Guests of distinction sat "above the salt" toward the head of the table, while the inferior meekly ate their victuals below.

That was in Queen Elizabeth's day, and a lot of time and table setting rules have accumulated since then. They're still fairly simple, based on common sense, but they do raise occasional questions.

DEAR ANNE:

Can you tell me how to arrange silver correctly in a place setting? Also, where are salad plates, beverages, and bread and butter plates placed? And on which side do you offer the food and from which remove the plates? Mrs. W. E. M.
Arlington.

Forks repose at the left of the plate, the knife and spoons at the right, with the knife on the inside. Place them in the order in which they will be used, starting at the outer edge of the setting. The butter spreader is placed across the bread and butter plate.

The drinking glass goes on the right above the knife, while tea cups are to the right of the spoons. The bread-and-butter dish is at the left above the forks, with the salad plate further to the left and near the edge of the table.

Place, pass, and remove all dishes at the left, except for beverages. When serving, always use the hand farthest from the guest. Idea is to poke no annoying elbows into the guest's shoulder.

DEAR ANNE:

For my Easter bonnet, I would like very much to dye a tan straw summer hat black to match my other accessories. Can this be done successfully at home? What should I purchase to dye it with?
A Constant Reader
Lovettsville, Va.

Hat dye is sold by some drug stores. It may take a bit of searching to find the color you want or your drug store may be able to order it for you. With it, you can do a fairly good job of color-changing on straw hats.

DEAR ANNE:

Do you know of any way of removing the shine from the seat of men's trousers? It is due to sitting. Please do not publish name—on husband's request.
T. L. H.

Vinegar is helpful in toning down the shine on woolen and silk materials. Wet a piece of cheesecloth with it, then rub the fabric. It may take a few days of airing afterward to get the vinegar smell out of the clothes.

DEAR ANNE:

We are two sisters, planning to be married in a double wedding in May. Would it be possible for us to serve as each other's maids-of-honor at the wedding?
M. J. and T. L. J.

Yes, each can do the honors for the other on this happy occasion. Each in turn will hold her sister's bridal bouquet during the betrothal ceremony. Your husbands-to-be can also serve as best men for each other, if they wish. However, just to be on the safe side, each groom should keep his own bride's ring in his own waistcoat pocket.

DEAR ANNE:

Where can the newly developed paint used to decorate china, glass, or metal be purchased in downtown Washington? This is the kind that doesn't require kiln-firing, but can be baked on china in your kitchen oven. It was recently mentioned in your column.
Mrs. B. B.

One downtown dealer in art supplies who has this paint can be reached by telephoning National 6386. It comes in sets selling for $2 and $3, containing the paint in primary colors plus extender, thinner, etc.

Anne answers questions through her column only. Address letters to "Anne," Room 408, The Washington Post, Washington 4, D. C. Names and addresses of questioners will be used, unless specifically requested otherwise.

Arts Club Reception Will Fete Book By Senator Thomas

The Arts Club of Washington will give a reception on March 31 from 5 to 7 p. m. in honor of Senator Elbert D. Thomas of Utah, on the occasion of the publishing of his latest book "This Nation Under God."

First elected to the Senate in 1932, Senator Thomas is chairman of the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, and a member of the Foreign Relations Committee. He is a former professor of political science at the University of Utah.

During the hours of the reception the favorite musical selections of three Presidents of the United States—Jefferson, Lincoln and Roosevelt—stressed in Senator Thomas' book will be played.

Robert LeFevre, president of the club, and Mrs. LeFevre will receive.

Take Brats, Add Wings, Up Come Fledglings

YOU WOULDN'T call them 'brats,' now would you? A group of Bolling Air Force Base youngsters get together at tea to discuss the proposed change of name for Air Force children from the time-honored Army term, "brat," to "fledgling" as proposed by Mrs. Hoyt S. Vandenberg, wife of the Air Force chief of staff. Mrs. Vandenberg has written to Air Force parents for their reactions.

The young ladies above, all of whom voted for the change, are (left to right) Becky Burnham, 2, daughter of Lieut. and Mrs. Welbon Burnham; Beth and Barbara Amen, 2 and, 3, daughters of Col. and Mrs. Henry J. Amen; Jackie Clarke, 3, daughter of Lieut. and Mrs. Jack Clarke; Cherrie Theisen, 2, (in rear) daughter of Maj. and Mrs. E. J. Theisen; Chris Thompson, 3, daughter of Lieut. and Mrs. John C. Thompson, and Christy King, 2, daughter of Maj. and Mrs. Donald King.

Punch and Judy to Clown for Show

The annual spring children's show for the benefit of the Green Acres School scholarship fund, will be held April 8, at the Leland Junior High School in Bethesda.

Pick Temple, Washington folk and ballad singer, will act as master of ceremonies. Other features of the program will include Freddie the Clown, and a marionette and old-style Punch and Judy show.

Green Acres, a nonprofit day school in suburban Washington, is sponsoring this Easter holiday matinee for small fry. Tickets may be obtained by telephoning Oliver 6165 during school hours.

Bethesda AAUW Sponsors School Literary Project

"Chips," the Bethesda-Chevy Chase High School art and literary magazine, is being sponsored this year by the American Association of University Women in that community. Prizes of $5 each will be awarded by the group for the best prose, poetry, sketch and photography.

Contributions to the magazine will be accepted until March 30. In addition to the prizes, many A. A. U. W. members are subscribing to the magazine which is published on a nonprofit basis. "Chips" has for several years received national recognition for its outstanding quality in the field of high school literary efforts.

Dr. Alpenfels To Give Annual Ruediger Lecture

Dr. Ethel Alpenfels, associate professor of education at New York University, will deliver the annual Ruediger Lecture at George Washington University on March 31, 8 p. m., in the Hall of Government, Room 101. Dr. Alpenfels will speak on "The H-R Factor, Human Relations in the Public Schools."

The Ruediger Lecture is sponsored annually by Pi Lambda Theta, national honorary education society for women. The lecture is presented for students, teachers, and professors in the field of education at local schools, colleges and universities. It honors the late Dean William C. Ruediger.

D. C. Federation Will Pick Envoys

The regular meeting of the District of Columbia Federation of Women's Clubs will be held on Monday in the Gold room of the Hamilton Hotel at 11 a. m. The advisory council will meet at 10 a. m. in the Blue Room.

Special business at the morning session will be the election of delegates to the GFWC Convention to be held in Boston, May 28-June 3.

After recess for 1 o'clock luncheon, the afternoon program will be presented by Mrs. Charles S. Bilisoly, department chairman of education, and Mrs. Otto Hammerlund, department of American home.

Midget SPIN Curlers

for perfect neckline curls far easier, far faster!

Nothing before like them! Now only with Toni—Midget SPIN Curlers. They're a smaller edition of the amazing Toni SPIN Curlers that have revolutionized home waving. All plastic—no rubber bands. Winding surface is only 1¼". They grip the shortest hair—even stubby ends can't slip away.

Easy-spin action rolls up each curl in a jiffy! Then Midget SPIN Curlers lock with a finger-flick. They wind closer to the head without pressing down on the curls. Thus you get a longer-lasting, more natural-looking wave. The new short hair styles make Midget SPIN Curlers a "must." Only Toni has them!

Get this 3-in-1 Value Today!

6 Midget SPIN Curlers in a handy Toni Kit

The Shop Scout

RELAX WITH PAINT AND PALETTE!! . . . Put your spare time during the day or evening to good advantage by enrolling in an interesting art course at the well known THEODORA KANE STUDIO. Learn to paint in any media under expert supervision — oil, water color, pastel and pencil sketching. Starting in April, outdoor landscape—still life, portrait, life models—small groups; individual instruction in 2-hr. periods. Beginners and advanced. Instruction in framing and exhibitions of work for sale. 808 17th St. N.W. between H and Eye, 2d fl. ST. 7917 or DI. 0371.

BEAUTY'S FIRST APPEAL . . . is a lovely head of hair, smartly and flattering coiffured in soft, natural-looking waves. For highly skilled work by ANTOINE TRAINED STYLISTS, the Scout recommends a visit to the popular VAN REGA salon at 1805 Conn. Ave. N.W. at Florida. They stress the importance of the cut of your hair as it is the basis for a pretty and successful permanent—their little brush-curl-cuts are priced at $2, and they also specialize in the lovely Silver Jubilee permanents by Rilling. Call AD. 1707 soon for your appointment to new hair beauty! Open Mondays 1 to 6; Tuesdays through Saturdays from 9 to 6.

EVERYTHING FOR THE SPRING BRIDE . . . is obtainable at Alexandria's NOT NEW shop. The Scout found a really choice selection of beautiful wedding gowns, exquisite negligees with gowns to match, and some lovely pieces of old lace. They also have many appropriate and pretty gifts for brides—chafing dishes, china, silver and linen, including banquet cloths and a 17-piece luncheon set. If you're a bride-to-be or you are shopping for presents, you'd be wise to take the Scouts advice and hurry in to 113 South Royal St., Alex., VA. AL. 0649.

SOMETHING NEW AT CENTRO HOBBY SHOP! . . . a SALE of interesting and attractive HANDCRAFTS by local artists starting Monday, March 27, and lasting for 1 week. There'll be ceramics, metal work, textiles, textile paintings and etchings. You won't want to miss it, so remember the date and address. CENTRO HOBBY SHOP, 7720 Georgetown Road, Bethesda, Md. Open daily 9 a .m. to 9 p. m. OL. 2747.

HOW TO REDECORATE AND LIKE IT! . . . If you can't make up your mind about patterns, styles or colors — about what to keep and what to discard—on what to spend and what to economize—you need professional advice. The Scout is happy to remind you that such advice is available by the hour in your home at your convenience. By making an appointment you are obligated to buy nothing except the time and experience of the decorator. For fees and other questions call OR. 8456.

INTERESTING TO LEARN . . . fascinating to do—UNDERGLAZE DECORATING which is taught at the HEBBARD CERAMIC STUDIO, in addition to comprehensive courses in ceramics for beginners and advanced students. New classes will begin here the week of April 3. Enrollments are now being accepted, so the Scout advises you to register early as classes are limited to a small number to assure individual attention. 2002 S St. N.W., ½ blk. off Conn. Ave. DU. 6595.

WHAT COULD BE SMARTER . . . than a beautiful little fur cape, stole or short fur jacket to top your Easter finery? If you have an old fur coat you're tired of why not have it skillfully remodeled at MICHAEL'S. This popular furrier will restyle it into a cape or stole for just $35 or make it into a jacket for $60. These very moderate prices also include a new satin lining, cleaning and glazing and storage for the summer. 1829 K St. N.W. Open Mon. thru Fri. till 7 p. m.; Sat. till 5. ST. 5095.

NEW SPRING HATS . . . to match a suit or coat can be made out of your own material by MOLLO STUDIO for $5 up. MOLLO cleverly remodels last year's hats, $2.50 up, and has a good selection of hat frames, straw bodies, flowers, fruit and veiling. Easter will be here before you know it so hurry in to the NEW LOCATION of MOLLO STUDIO, 918 F St. N.W., elevator to 3d fl. Room 311. DI. 2745. Closed Mon.

EASTER DRESS-UP TIME IS NEAR . . . so visit KIDDIE TOWN which as adorable TAFFETA DRESSES, sizes 1 to 3 and 3 to 6x, $2.98. Picture-pretty straw hats $1.98 and $2.50; organdy bonnets for infants. ## BPW Goes West for Conclave

New York, N. Y.—The tenth Biennial Convention of the National Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs, Inc., will open July 2 at the San Francisco Opera House in San Francisco, Calif., according to a statement released here today by Dr. K. Frances Scott of Northampton, Mass., national president of the federation.

At this session, Dr. Scott will introduce the honor guest of the evening, Governor Earl Warren of California. All business sessions of the convention will be held in the Civic Auditorium in San Francisco. The Executive Board will have offices at the Fairmont Hotel.

The 1950 convention theme will be "Turn the Tide At the Turn of the Century," Dr. Scott announced.

Delegates representing 155,000 members of the national federation will start arriving in California on June 28, from the 48 States, Alaska and Hawaii.

Monday evening, July 3, will feature, "Bigness in a democracy—a danger or a help?" "Big business, big labor and big government must be kept within bounds so as not to destroy the essence of democracy," Mrs. Scott said. Experts in each of these three fields will speak on Monday night.

Lake Barcroft Sold To New Englanders For Luxury Estates

SALE of the 869-acre Lake Barcroft in nearby Fairfax County, only 7 miles from the White House, for development as a 25-million-dollar subdivision of luxury homes has been announced.

Joseph P. Day, Inc., of New York City, brokers, said the former Alexandria Water Co. property has been purchased by a group of New Englanders, headed by David Miller, assistant attorney general of Massachusetts.

No price was disclosed, but informed Virginia brokers, estimated the property sold somewhere near its $1,300,000 price quoted by the Day organization to prospects.

The property is between Columbia and Leesburg Pikes, adjacent to the large Culmore and Parkwood Apartment projects and just a few minutes drive from the four lane Shirley hwy.

IT was put up for sale several months ago when the Alexandria Water Co. declared the property surplus and moved to more modern facilities at Occoquan, Va.

Discussing plans for his purchase, to be called Lake Barcroft Estates, Miller said homes to be erected would serve as all-year country homes with beach facilities, but within a few minutes drive of Washington.

Developers plan to divide the 680 woodland acres surrounding the 114-acre lake into plots for miniature country estates. Lot owners will have use of several private beaches and boathouses planned for the lake's 5 miles of shoreline. The owners will stock the lake for fishing.

Joseph V. Barger of New York, vice president in charge of operations, is here completing final details of the title transfer and negotiations for property development.

He said plots in Lake Barcroft Estates will be sold directly to the public or through builders. Homes built must measure up to architec-

New Housing Projects Under Way Here Aimed at $50 to $80 Weekly Salaries

By Conrad P. Harness

THE arrival of spring means many things to many people. But to a real estate editor it means his mid-winter spells of lethargy are over.

From now until after the Redskins hang up their uniforms, the building business makes a widow out of a realty editor's spouse.

So many builders have so many huge projects either under way or ready to start, that you wonder who will buy all the new homes to be built.

You wonder until you remember the 2000, 4000 and 6000 persons attracted to local subdivisions over the past few weekends to inspect model houses.

The demand is there and the building industry is working at full capacity to take care of it. Especially in the under $10,000 brackets. This article will discuss NEW projects for low and medium cost homes.

605 Arlington Homes

WHILE some are tangents or offshoots from established subdivisions, most are entirely new and will appear in print here for the first time.

For example, Colonial Investment Co. plans up to 1000 homes in the Wheaton, Md., area. Semi-detached frame in style, two-bedroom homes will sell for an estimated $8150, with $8990 for three bedrooms.

Snell Construction Corp. plans to start 605 homes this year in Arlington. The Douglas Park area, between Columbia Pike and Shirley hgwy. will be the site of 205 homes. They will be two-bedroom bricks to sell at $10,500.

Mac Lindsey, broker for Snell, said another 400 homes are planned in the vicinity of N. 29th and Ohio, Arlington, by Snell. These will be three-bedroom ramblers to sell for $13,500.

Edward R. Carr, veteran builder, plans to start 220 semidetached brick residences this year in the Southeast portion of the District, on D st., Texas and Burbank aves. They will sell at $9990, at no cash down to qualified veterans and monthly payments of $63.

$6990 Houses

PROBABLY the lowest price tags offered by any large scale builder are those of Hamilton Construction Co., operating on a 500-acre tract called "Kentland," across the street from the Prince Georges Country Club, in the Landover, Md., area.

Hamilton has completed 84 homes, has 64 more under way and is ready to start an additional 54. Prices are $6990 for a two-bedroom, two-story frame home of five rooms. Veterans will pay $47.50 monthly over a 25-year period, according to G. R. Carson, sales broker.

A bigger two-bedroom house sells for $7950 on monthly payments of $52. A three-bedroom house at $8950 requires a monthly payment of $57.50. Qualified veteran buyers pay nothing down.

Hardy House, a factory built home with materials precut at Annapolis Junction, Md., is building a 25-home project on Carroll ave., Laurel, Md., where a model house is nearing completion.

James A. Hewitt, Washington broker, said the residences will sell for under $10,000. They boast a floor area of 965 square feet.

Hewitt said another project of 225 homes is planned by the same firm at Wheatoncrest, Wheaton, Md. The exact price is not known but is expected to be under $10,000 also. The prices include fully equipped kitchens.

THE rash of housing projects has resulted in much "visiting" between builders and their projects.

Each developer is on a constant search to improve his housing project. And what better way than by visiting several fast-selling model houses and taking home ideas?

One of Washington's biggest home builders has started a very nice project south of Alexandria. A beautiful model house is up and completely furnished. There has been no newspaper publicity or advertising on it because the builder believes he has such an outstanding house that it will sell without any fanfare.

And it looks like he is correct. Already over 60 percent of this year's planned production of 300 homes has been sold, even though only 70 are actually under way. And the builder still fears publicity because other builders would copy his house and sales might drop.

These homes are three-bedroom, of colorful cedar shake single exteriors. The average sales price is

See HARNESS, Page 3, Column 4.

Earl J. Preston will erect 150 homes similar to model house, above, at his Glenmont Village subdivision, off Georgia ave. ext., Wheaton, Md. Priced at $8990, it has two bedrooms, 11 by 12 and 11 by 9, an 11-by-18-foot living room, 11-by-11 kitchen, and storage space in the attic. Qualified veterans can purchase with $300 settlement costs and $60 monthly

The Washington Post

Model house nearing completion on Decatur st., Kensington, Md., by Standard Properties, Inc., to sell for under $8000. Fifteen hundred homes are to be built in the same area by the builders

The Housing Outlook

Builders Go to Colors; Garbage Can Vanishes

LOOK for more colorful homes to rise this year. The Nation's home builders have discovered that COLOR can be a potent sales factor in selling new homes.

A few far-sighted developers with Long Island's huge Levittown a case in point, have pioneered in bold, dramatic colors for exteriors and interiors. The sales success of these projects have lured other construction firms into putting more emphasis on gay hues.

It is a good way to obtain variety in large scale subdivisions of 20 or more single family homes, builders have discovered. With a variety of bold colors for doors, shutters, roof gables and and other items in the house, each home is given an "individual" look, eliminating the sameness in production of homes of the same floor plan and design.

The trend really got going with the introduction of low-slung rambler type homes. The sales success has prompted many builders to vow, "we'll never go back to white!"

* * * *

BIGGER FAMILIES, SMALLER HOMES: The two don't go together and the building industry is searching for an answer to this problem:

"How to build bigger homes for large families while keeping costs down?"

The problem was highlighted last week by Ewan Clague, Commissioner, Bureau of Labor Statistics, who reported 1,900,000 marriages last year, a big drop from 1946's 2,300,000 knots tied. However, births were up, with 3,700,000 babies born last year, compared with 2,400,000 in the 1935-39 period.

Clague said a large percentage of last year's births were "second and third" babies in war-marriage families. He concluded that the average postwar family would be somewhat larger than prewar, thus the need for more three bedroom homes.

But three-bedroom homes cost more and organized building groups are trying to get costs down. The problem could come to a rapid head if rent controls die as scheduled on June 30.

Rents are expected to rise an estimated 10 percent if controls are lifted. Thousands of families are expected to buy homes instead of paying the increased rentals, thus creating a larger demand for housing. And three-bedroom homes are expected to be in top demand.

JERSEY BOOM: The saw-and-hammer fraternity in New York and New Jersey took top national honors last year in the number of homes and apartments started. The area accounted for 293,260 "starts." Together with Los Angeles, the two areas produced 16 percent of the Nation's 1,025,800 "starts" last year.

Nationally, the building boom continues unabated, with 80,000 "starts" in both January and February of this year. The comparable figure for February of last year was only 54,000!

If the boom continues, and it appears likely, the result should be more competition among builders for consumer dollars, with the buyer getting more for his money.

GARBAGE CAN EXIT: Eyes of municipal authorities are watching an experiment in the small city of Jasper, Ind. On August 1, it bids goodby to the outdoor garbage cans. An ordinance will be effective then banning any outdoor storage of garbage. Families may burn or bury garbage, so long as it does not become a nuisance or sanitation hazard, however.

The law is a boon to the garbage disposer industry. The city has arranged with a big manufacturer to install garbage disposers in those homes which desire them, at a bargain price of $75, about half the normal cost. It is estimated that about 1500 units will be needed in the city of 6800 population.

For those who can't scrape up the $75 at once, local banks are making long-term loans at low interest rates. Already 77 homes have the units, with applications for 820 more. Jasper is unusual in that 95 percent of families own their homes and all but six have electricity. There are no slums.

Experts claim passing of the garbage can is the greatest thing since the outhouse made its departure. And Jasper's city fathers can find new uses for the $13,000 it formerly cost to collect the garbage by truck.

Much can be said about the American home being built about the fireplace. For ourselves the hearth has become the family altar. For the builder who built this custom-built home for himself, he carefully purchased a slab of Italian Marble to take the heart out for perfect markings; for a feeling of spaciousness, a magnificent plain mirror was designed above the mantel.

Product Previews

THIS is the new radically styled Westinghouse "Rancho" range. Utilizing a U-shaped chrome-finished tube leg in place of the conventional end panel on the right side gives the appearance of a knee-hole desk and proyides "tuck-away" space. The oven and storage drawer are on the left. The lowest price range produced by Westinghouse since the war, it is available locally.

Match books that give off light without striking a match are produced by Firefly Plastics, 208 East Erie st., Chicago, with covers printed in bright-glowing luminescent ink. Designs are more clearly seen in the dark than in the light.

Illustrated phonograph records with twirlers for children are being produced by the Record Guild of America, Inc., of Brooklyn, N. Y. The small records are made of vinylite plastic with sealed edges to prevent warping. They come packaged in paperboard which can be punched out and assembled into a barn and farmyard animals (for the record "Old Mac Donald"). Put the barn and animals on top of the disc, and the whole illustration twirls with the music. Other kid tunes have other cut-out illustrations.

A faucet washer that swivels freely and eliminates wearing friction is the new product of Snap Products Corp. of Chicago. The washer snaps into place and is compressed against the faucet seat instead of being rotated against it. The face of the washer is made of a material which Snap Products says can be boiled for eight hours, placed under a 1000-pound weight for eight hours, and it will return to within .001 of an inch of its original thickness in 15 seconds.

Spring is in the air this week in the new products division, but winter's chill still lingers.

For the fisherman with thoughts of spring, Crossman-Brinkman, Inc., of Hammond, Ind., is making a three-section tackle box of bakelite phenolic plastic.

Here is what is offered: 37 individual bait and lure compartments, an aluminum inner lid to prevent shifting when the box is upside down, and gaskets to make the box waterproof. If you drop it in the water when closed, it will float.

The Sonotone Corp., of Elmsford, N. Y., has a new line of spring hats for women to hear through. The Sonotone hearing aid fits into the hats out of sight. And the hats include spring models for wearing at the beach or even in bed when you want to conceal your hearing aid.

Getting back to winter again, there are two new model radiant heat panels on the market. The General Radiant Heater Co. of New York has a British-designed screened panel that gives off electric radiant heat with individual thermostatic control. And the Continental Radiant Glass Heating Corp. of New York is making a junior model glass panel of 630 watts for use in small rooms like dens and bathrooms.

Fluorescent dyes are being manufactured by the General Aniline & Film Corp. of New York to be combined with washing compounds to make white clothes whiter. The fluorescent dyes absorb light energy and throw it back as visible radiation. Use of the dyes eliminates the need for bluing and decreases the need for chemical bleaches, the company says.

Laboratory Equipment Corp. of St. Joseph, Mich., uses a magnet to keep cabinet doors closed. It is simply a permanent magnet on the cabinet and a small steel plate on the door. When the door is closed, the magnet keeps it closed. Pull to open. No need for a conventional catch.

A cork tile flooring three sixteenths of an inch thick, priced for the mass market, is being made by David E. Kennedy, Inc., in Brooklyn and Chicago plants. The maker says it is the first time that such a covering has been marketed at 25 percent less than previous cork floorings.

The flooring comes in sizes of 6 by 6, 12 by 12, and 6 by 12 inches in shades from light oak to dark walnut with beveled or square edges and in waxed or natural finishes. Because of its insulating qualities against heat, cold and sound, the cork tile also can be used as wall covering.

For protection against moisture, seeping and water-borne dirt, the Protection Products Manufacturing Co., of Kalamazoo, Mich., is producing a colorless silicone product for application to cement and other masonry surfaces. It penetrates the masonry to form a seal and can be applied on new walls or those covered with water paint.

A new design for low pressure tires by the Seiberling Rubber Co. of Akron, Ohio, is offered to lengthen tire life. The tire has added rubber at the shoulder to spread out the flexing area at the point where the tire bends under rolling pressure. This, the maker says, shares the work and spreads the load of the vehicle over a wider tire area.

General Electric Co., at its plant in Cleveland, Ohio, is producing a new light bulb shaped like a mushroom for use in ceiling fixtures in the home or in public places. The lamp gives a soft light in a base-up position by directing two thirds of the light upward to create an indirect lighting effect. The bottom of the 50-watt bulb is covered with a soft-toned permanent enamel finish. The company says the bulb is a complete lighting device in itself and makes unnecessary the use of light-absorbing fixtures to improve the lighting effect of bare bulb fixtures. Distribution starts in May.

A plastic cement that can be written or typed on is produced by Pronto-Seal Inc. of New York for repairing documents and books or wood, leather and fabric. The cement is waterproof and can be used as masking tape or insulation.

BASIL M. DeLASHMUTT, Arlington engineer, was said to be working on a tentative set of site plans which will include necessary land for a school, recreation center, nursery, playground and a shopping center.

All utilities and improvements will be put in by the developers, it was said. At present two sewer lines extend the length of the property.

Miller said his group had been inspecting property all along the Eastern Seaboard and as far west as Texas. He added he was amazed to find such a property ripe for development so close to Washington.

This group plans to make the site one of Washington's finest residential communities. It is close to other upper-income subdivisions, namely Ravenwood and Malbrook.

12-Unit Apartments

Low Cost Housing Projects Started

$10,800. The purchasers' monthly payment, including all charges, is $64 a month.

Last week the builder studied 100 applications from purchasers and found that the buyer's average monthly income was $340.

THE $64 per month falls into the category of middle-income housing. The "middle third" income group in this area makes from a little over $2500 to $4500 per year, when both family and individual incomes are averaged by the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

This was the 1947 estimate by BLS and incomes have gone up since then, possibly as much as 5 percent, a BLS statistician estimated.

Using the $2500-$4500 income figures, families in those categories could very easily afford monthly payments of from $41 to $70. If any cash was paid down at the time the house was purchased, the monthly payments would be less, of course.

The average middle-income family brought home $4162 in pay checks in 1947. Saying they paid 10 percent cash down on a house, they could afford monthly payments up to $75. A $10,000 house is within easy reach.

Other new housing projects contemplated or under way include one of 165 homes to be erected in Falls Church, Va., to sell for about $9000. A Newport News, Va., firm is behind this development and further information will be released to the public next month.

382 Home Project

OUT Prince Georges County way, in a new subdivision to be called Templeton Knolls, Spiller Construction Co. will build 382 semidetached brick homes to sell for $10,000 and under.

The project will be located near the junction of Riverdale and Edmonston rds., in East Riverdale, Md., reports Thomas V. Lake, agent. Construction will start within 30 days, with a furnished model house to be finished within 60 days. The entire project will be completed in 1950, Lake reports. Plans call for both two and three bedroom homes.

Another large builder, who requested anonymity until all plans are completed, will erect 300 dwellings in the Belvedere section of Fairfax County, Va.

These projects listed are only the bigger developments. There are dozens of smaller-scale operations involving 10 to 50 homes which space does not permit listing. It looks like a record building year.

7 Brick Homes Planned

Homesite Realty Corp. plans to build two brick homes on Quesada st., and five on Peabody st., near 30th st. nw., according to plans just announced.

This Week in Real Estate

IT MUST be spring. The Washington Real Estate Board, which threw one of their best parties in years last Friday night at the Mayflower, has put out a call for sofeball players.

The Real Estate Board Softball League invites all member offices interested in entering teams to send a representative to a meeting at board offices at 11 a. m., April 3, to discuss league plans.

Offices wishing to compete, but lacking a complete team, will be given help in fielding a full team. For further information contact Frank Francella, NA. 8885, or James Robey, ST. 3300, or Robert Humphries, NA. 5020.

Home Realty Co., 1726 Pennsylvania ave. nw., has a neat trick designed to win friends. Parking is a problem in their area, as it is most places, and salesmen are frequently asked to make change for parkers who lack that necessary nickel.

So Jesse E. Aiken, partner in Home Realty, has equipped his sales force with a printed card on which a nickel is attached. It reads:

"Kindly accept 60 minutes of freedom from worry about your auto with our compliments. When we manage your property or handle your sales, loan or insurance problems you do not have to worry about the details."

The executive board of the National Association of Home Builders, headed by President Tom Coogan of Miami, is in town for a three-day meeting. Policy and association activities for the year will be discussed.

James W. Pearson, major domo of the Fourth Annual Washington Home Show and Home Furnishings Festival, May 12-21 at the National Guard Armory, reports 108 exhibitors have already signed on the dotted line.

Two of the top features include a $35,000 animated kitchen by Crosley, with 80 moving parts controlled by 54 electric switches. Hot and cold running waitresses, too? And the Chesapeake and Potomac Iris Society will holds its annual Iris Show at the Armory, with 16,000 1600 varieties on display.

Bill Atkinson of Oklahoma City, vice president of the National Association of Home Builders, will be guest of honor April 12 at a dinner given by the local Home Builders Association at the Washington Golf and Country Club.

During January and February the FHA issued mortgage insuring commitments on more housing for Negroes than were issued during all of last year. These commitments covered 12,800 homes and apartments, with more than half to be erected in the Southern States.

FHA Commissioner Franklin D. Richards remarked: "It is obvious that the building industry is recognizing the real possibilities in the long overlooked market among Negroes for privately financed housing.

"Not only is this fact demonstrated by the greatly accelerated rate of production for such housing, but also in declarations of policy that have been made by lenders' and builders' groups to provide needed housing for minority groups."

Construction Contracts Hit Slight Decline

New York, March 25 (AP).—Engineering construction contract awards declined moderately this week but the year's total remained well ahead of 1949, Engineering News-Record reported today.

The engineering construction weekly said the week's total was $177,330,000, down 17 percent from last week's $213,207,000 and 2 percent under the $180,930,000 for the like week in 1949. However, the cumulative total for the first 12 weeks of the year reached $2,336,248,000, or 34 percent ahead of the corresponding date last year.

Private contract awards amounted to $111,584,000 or 24 percent under last week's $146,597,000 but 71 percent above the $64,307,000 in the like 1949 week. They included a 20-million-dollar office building in Los Angeles.

Public contract awards totalled $65,746,000, 1 percent under last week's $66,610,000 and 43 percent below the $115,623,000 in the corresponding week last year. They included a $7,900,000 veterans hospital in Salt Lake City.

HOLC Returns 26 Million to Treasury

The Home Owners' Loan Corporation, established in 1933 to halt the wave of foreclosures on urban homes, has repayed 26 million dollars to the United States Treasury on the 200 million dollars in Federal funds advanced for establishment of the corporation. Complete repayment is expected to be made.

The HOLC has paid off the last of $3,489,000,000 in bonds floated to finance its operations. It is 95 percent liquidated, and holds a surplus of close to 10 million dollars.

In its three-year lending period, HOLC refunded the over-due mortgages of more than 1 million families, and provided for repayment in small monthly instalments. The total HOLC investment amounted to nearly $3,500,000,000.

Magazine to Publish Case Study of D. C. Architects

A case study of works by local architects will be carried in the April issue of Progressive Architecture magazine. Editors report that architects with ability and "conviction" have been able to produce some excellent work in spite of a "conglomerate popula-tion . . . which clings insistently to flatly average hometown taste."

Photos of new schools, churches, stores, offices and homes are shown. The magazine claimed that much local construction and design has been influenced by "florid, sometimes chaste, sometimes just colorless Government work."

Summing up the Washington case study, Progressive Architecture said: "All in all, Washington has produced in the last 18 months an architectural product typical of United States architecture—1950."

They Go With Modern Homes

New Patterns Underfoot!

By Ann Pringle

WALL-to-wall solid color carpeting, seized upon by modernists to take the place of the cozy florals and busy Orientals that didn't fit too well with molded plywood and abstract prints, has some stiff competition this year. The figured carpet that can go with modern furnishings is stepping in to do its part of the job.

What the people with modern homes objected to in figured carpets was not the presence of pattern, but the fact that the pattern was too often a closely designed, complicated one which played down the simple, understated appeal of the other furnishings in the room. They are now beginning to get distinctive, restful patterns that emphasize rather than fight with the smooth curves, straight lines and contrasting textures of modern furniture.

Geometric Designs

THE new figured carpets fight shy of fuzzy scroll effects and concentrate on geometric and abstract patterns, small checks, stripes or tartans. The ones designed with modern rooms in mind are mostly done in subtle, muted colors, while those which take note of the current popularity of Colonial and French Provincial furniniture attack the problem in a modern way, with bold designs, brilliant colors and stylized motifs replacing earlier muddy colors and wishy-washy figures.

Bright, irregular color strips for modern rag rug

IRREGULAR stripes come in soft shadings of neutral colors or in brilliant multicolor combinations. Provincial designs may have the delicacy of botanical prints or they may be as fresh and sharp and gay as the designs on peasant pottery.

In all of them a new color psychology is apparent. Brown, in all its cinnamon, nutmeg, sherry and cocoa tones; warm gold; shrimp; coral, aqua, and olive are some of the colors that add freshness to the 1950 carpet picture.

The effect of colors and designs is reinforced by the textures of the yarns used. Smooth, clipped pile is paired with rougher frieze and twist surfaces.

IN one carpet a cut-pile overpattern of large, lace-like leaves is set against narrow horizontal lines in twist yarn. In another, a free-flowing abstract motif in hard twist yarns stands out from a background of plain cut pile. For a carpet in tones of ruby, green, gold, blue and burgundy, clipped pile stripes run one way and looped twist pile stripes the other, creating a checkered effect.

Prices for the new patterned carpets vary, but they do not shoot up into the astronomical brackets. Some of the simpler, less pretentious texture weaves are under $7 a square yard. Others go up to about $12 a square yard.

Freeman to Build 33 Md. Homes

Carl M. Freeman, Inc., has announced a spring building program of 33 residences to be erected on Dilston rd., Colesville, Md., and five homes on Anniston rd., Alta Vista Terrace, Bethesda, Md.

The Dilston rd. homes will be 1½-story, of frame construction. The Aniston rd. project will be large brick bungalows. Both have radiant heating systems. Building permits have been issued.

Perper Plans 23 Homes

Saunders Realty Firm Buys New Building

The William H. Saunders Co., established in 1878 and one of the oldest realty firms in the area, has purchased its own building at 1726 H st. nw. and will operate from that address effective March 26.

The firm is now located at 1519 K st. nw., in the Continental Building. Claude Livingstone, jr., is president.

9 Homes for Oakview

Harold Katzel of Tower Construction Co. has just applied for permits to erect nine more brick residences in the Oakview section, off New Hampshire ave. ext.

New Type Of Skyscraper Due in '50's

SKYSCRAPERS of the 1950s will be very different from towering structures of the past, reports Architectural Forum Magazine.

A new trend, the lightweight curtain wall, is one big difference. Walls are hung like curtains and are not used to support the building. Not since 1893 has any tall building been constructed with walls which support their own weight. The weight of the walls is borne by the steel frame of the building and the walls themselves serve only as protecting and enclosing surfaces.

What is radically new and different about the curtain walls of today is their thickness and weight, reports the Forum. From a conventional 10 to 12 inches of masonry and metal, weighing somewhere between 100 and 175 pounds per square foot of surface area, the skyscraper wall of the 1950s has suddenly been reduced to a thin 2 to 4-inch insulated sheet which is featherweight by comparison.

This dramatic drop in weight has just been made possible with the revision of restrictive building codes in New York, Chicago, Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Los Angeles and other major cities.

The lifting of these restrictions and the substitution of thin, lightweight materials for the ponderous walls of the past will have a far-reaching effect on the economics of the skyscraper, the Forum claims. The cost of wall materials is sharply reduced, as is the cost of the frame, which no longer has to support such staggering weight.

The amount of usable space is significantly increased, and, perhaps most important of all, the time required for construction, and consequently for financing the building before any rents can be collected, is considerably shortened. This last factor, according to Edward X. Tuttle, vice president of the Turner Construction Co. of New York, "could amount to as much as $4000 per day."

L&M Co. to Build 47 Wheaton Homes

A 47-home project has been announced for early erection in "Chestnut Ridge Manor," a Wheaton, Md., subdivision, by L. & M. Construction Co., Inc. Homes will be 1½-story and no basement, of brick construction, with a 32-by-26 foot floor area.

Witt to Build 15 Homes

A building permit has been issued for 15 homes to be erected by H. M. Witt in the 7300 block of 24th ave., Hyattesville, Md. Units will be one story and basement of brick construction.

Magnetism Saves Time Rippling Filing Cards

CHICAGO, March 25.—Magnetism, the force which causes a needle of a compass to point north, now is used to make card filing easier.

Ernest Dahl, an office equipment manufacturer, is producing magnets. The magnetic system permits a clerk to see 18 to 20 cards at a glance. It eliminates the work of picking the cards out one at a time to read titles.

Dahl said the method will save filing time, making the task quicker by 35 percent. He calls it "the card that walks." The cards automatically fan out as each alphabetical listing is viewed.

A magnetic steel bar is fitted into the top edge of the aluminum case. The north and south magnetic poles run along the edges of the metal bar. This channeling of magnetic forces on the edge of a flat piece of metal is a wartime development.

Thin squares of metal are laminated in the paper filing cards. When the cards are placed in the file, the pieces of metal are parallel to the magnet.

Since like magnetic poles repel each other, the magnetized cards separate themselves as the clerk opens each alphabetical section of the file.

Dahl and his files

The opposite force is put to work to keep the cards clean. When the cards are pressed together, the attracting force of unlike poles is put into action and the cards are held together.

Dahl said his cards can be used anywhere index filing cards are employed.

Building Permits Under January's, Over Last Year's

Building operations in the District of Columbia last month, as measured by permits issued by the District building inspector's office, dropped to $3,248,755 from January's total of $5,741,503.

However, the February figure was still above the $2,807,055 issued in February, 1949.

Permits were granted for 155 brick homes, 17 apartment buildings and three stores. The geographical distribution by units was as follows: Northeast, 44; Southeast, 60; Northwest, 105, and Southwest, 0.

By type there were 86 detached homes, 60 semi-detached, 4 row, 6 community and 53 apartment units.

40-Home Project To Rise on 46th Pl., SE.

A 40-hour project of two-story, semidetached homes will rise in the 1100 block of 46th pl. and the 1100 block of H st. se., by Galveston Realty Corp. owners and builders. A permit application has been filed.

Better Homes Research Planned

Research into how to make homes more comfortable at less cost will be undertaken in seven projects, with Uncle Sam footing the bill.

HHFA has announced agreements have been made with the National Bureau of Standards, the United States Public Health Service and the University of Illinois.

Research will cover plumbing and sewage disposal systems, heating and ventilation, and chimneys and flues. Results will be made available to the entire building industry.

36 SE. Brick Homes Planned by Selsky

A project of 36 semi-detached brick homes are planned for the following Southeast locations: 100 block of Darrington st., 100 block of Elmira st., and 4300 block of Nichols ave.

Samuel Selsky is the owner and builder. Units will be 16 by 29 feet each, two-stories high.

13 Alexandria Homes

Canon & Lewis, builders, have been issued a permit for 13 semi-detached homes on So. Payne st., Alexandria, Va.

California-Cape Cod Ideas

BLENDING California and Cape Cod ideas, this small house is based on the most popular Long Island plans since the war. A large tilted window, rising from a stone flower box, and high awning type windows hinged at the top are among features. This Although it covers only 828 square feet, a basement and expansion attic give it a generous capacity. It has 18,216 cubic feet. is Plan 2661 by Rudolph A. Matern, 90-04 161st st., Jamaica 2, New York

Tribros, Inc., Plans Two Developments

Two separate housing developments, one of 15 dwellings, the other for 43, are planned this year by Tribros, Inc., as part of a 250-home building program.

The 43 residences will be started in the vicinity of New Hampshire ave. and University lane, in nearby Prince Georges County, Md. They will be brick veneer ramblers with a 26-by-39 floor area.

Fifteen homes will be built near Wilson blvd. and Florida st., Arlington, with the same floor plan as above. General contractors for both jobs are Burroughs & Preston.

8 De Luxe Ramblers

Building plans are in progress by Gorin Bros., Inc., for eight large de luxe ramblers at 39th and Fessenden sts. nw. Floor areas will measure approximately 60 by 48 feet.

Rent Curbs Lifted

Rents have been decontrolled at Ypsilanti, Mich., by the Office of the Housing Expediter on the basis of a recommendation from the Ysilanti rent advisory board.

New Book Guides Developers Toward 'Dream' Neighborhood

A GUIDEBOOK to building better neighborhoods, representing the combined experience of the Nation's leading land developers, has now been made available to home builders.

If they follow its advice, property values are due for greater stability—and grandchildren and their children will grow up in the same better planned and more attractive neighborhoods as their parents and grandparents.

It is the "Home Builders Manual for Land Development" published by the National Association of Home Builders. It covers all aspects of land and community development for homes, neighborhood and apartment projects.

It shows builders and developers how to select land for subdivisions, mistakes to avoid in lot and street grading, subdivision planning for the ranch-type house and "rambler," parking facilities for garden apartments, water systems, road design, provision for schools and churches and other related building matters.

The popularity of the ranch-type house or "rambler," the manual maintains, is bound to have considerable effect on land subdivision. This is because the spread-out character of the one-story rambler requires wider lots. Whereas, the manual notes, 40-foot lots were acceptable not many years ago, now nothing less than 50-foot lots are considered adequate, and 60 feet is recommended as a minimum.

It also notes the passing of an old American institution, the front porch. It observes that with the passing of the horse and buggy, the "back yard" no longer was an unsightly service feature. "The front porch," the manual says, "famous in McKinley's presidential campaign, is now as out of date as kerosene lamps." Instead, homes are being "turned around" so as to face the rear of the lot which becomes, in turn, a sort of outdoor living room.

The new guidebook grew out of studies and meetings of 24 experienced community developers over a period of five years. Text was prepared by the Urban Land Institute, the private land development research organization.

54 Semi-Detached Homes

Fifty-four brick semi-detached homes will be erected on Gibbon, Henry, Franklin and Fayette sts., Alexandria, Va., for Fayette Homes, Inc., by Banks & Lee, Inc., general contractors. Subbids are being taken.

Contracts Show Heavy Gains

Contracts for building and engineering works in the Washington metropolitan area for January and February amounted to $42,729,000, an 80 percent increase over the same period of last year, according to the F. W. Dodge Corp. Last year's two months awards totaled $23,706,000.

Residential and nonresidential awards during the two months period showed large gains, each having increases of 97 percent over last year. The residential comparative figures are $27,193,000 this year and $13,818,000 last year.

Nonresidential projects rose from $7,129,000 last year to $14,044,000 this year, while heavy engineering fell off 46 percent to $1,492,000 this year.

The two months total volume of contracts awarded in the District of Columbia alone this year increased 35 percent over the corresponding period last year. The two months comparison reveals this year's figures at $11,440,000 and last year's total at $8,485,000.

Science Solves Lock Problem

When the doorlock on your automobile freezes, Golinfra Plastics of Brooklyn, N. Y., has the solution—thaw it out with steam. The Golinfra keyhole thawer is about the size of a shot gun shell and is made of plastic and metal. A small chemical cartridge carrier in the plastic end is inserted in the metal end together with a small amount of water. The chemical reaction generates steam which is forced out through a jet opening into the frozen keyhole. The plastic end acts as an insulated handle.

New Rubber Added to Asphalt to Stretch Highway Dollars

By Nate Haseltine

HIGHWAY engineers have added rubber to some new roads in Virginia, and hope to stretch the highway dollars.

The test roads aren't pneumatic, so you'll still need tires.

But the rubberized asphalt is expected to prolong the life of roads, reducing maintenance costs, a big factor in highway finance.

Incidental to the experiment but not to be overlooked is the fact that rubber particles in asphalt act as a "de-slicker," and may cut down skidding accidents. Another advantage, coincident to longer wear, is that the durability will minimize time and tie-ups of road repair.

Resists Ice, Too

VIRGINIA'S test strips include a 1000-foot section on Broad Street rd., Route 250, near its intersection with Route 157, about 5 miles west of Richmond. A second test strip, also on Route 250, is in Goochland County, 22 miles west of Richmond.

The economical Dutch have already demonstrated that rubber adds to highway life and cuts down maintenance costs. Rubber roads in the Netherlands were laid as early as 1938. The roads bore up well under the heavy German war traffic between Rotterdam and Amsterdam.

Of special winter interest is the fact that rubberized road asphalt tends to resist the formation of ice. And in wet weather as well as dry, engineers report, the rubber-impregnated roads reduced the skidding factor.

Though rubber has been mixed in highways in Europe for a dozen years, this type roadbuilding is a postwar development in the United States. Other States, besides Virginia, where test sections have been laid include Ohio, Minnesota and Texas.

Still further uses for the new rubberized asphalt are airport runways, playgrounds, tennis courts, city sidewalks and industrial flooring.

Natural rubber particles mixed with asphalt road surfacing may save Americans millions of dollars annually in reduced highway maintenance costs. Here, engineers of the Virginia State Highway Department supervise the laying of the first natural rubber road in the United States, on Route 250 just west of Richmond

New Field for Rubber

ENGINEERS of a prominent rubber manufacturing company recently stated:

"The most notable new use of rubber and the one which gives promise of utilizing tremendous quantities of this commodity is as an additive to asphalt for roadbuilding. Natural rubber thus far seems to have a definite technical edge in this development."

Two methods are used to add the rubber to standard paving mixes. One is to mix the rubber directly with the asphalt before mixing the asphalt with the aggregate. The second method, more widely used, is to add the rubber to the aggregate, prior to introduction of asphalt in the mixing chamber.

The rubber particles cause no visible change of color or consistency of the road-building material.

If the road stretches in Virginia and other States bear out their present glowing promise, the potential impact on an industry is staggering. America has 3,300,000 miles of highways and streets in various conditions of repair.

Pare Road Bills?

IN 1949, the bill for roadbuilding and road upkeep in the United States reached the whopping total of $1,700,000,000. Annual maintenance cost of present highways is about 900 million dollars.

The American Association of State Highway Officials has estimated it will take 3 billion dollars a year for 10 years to put into good shape the most important 700,000 highway miles in United States.

Faced with such staggering highway costs, any new development which gives promise of increasing the wear of a road surface and reducing its maintenance costs is worth a good trial. Natural rubber, mixed with asphalt, has focused the attention of roadbuilders on Virginia, Ohio, Minnesota and Texas.

Steel 'Retread'

Pittsburgh, Pa.—Westinghouse engineers are spraying molten steel on worn steel parts to repair equipment which otherwise would have to be discarded as obsolete or worn out. They are using a new tool developed by an atomizer concern.

13 Landover Homes

Thirteen more homes in Landover, Md., are planned by Hamilton Construction Co., for Queens Chapel, Inc., owner. Site is the 7600 block of Greenleaf rd. and 7600 block of Kilmer st. Homes are two-story semidetached frame.

12,000 New Miami Homes

Since August 1, 1945, 12,000 residence structures have been built or started in Miami to accommodate 20,000 families or about 60,000 persons.

Financing Homes Today Is Simpler

WHEN it comes to financing the home he wants to buy, the average American is much better off today than he was 50 years ago. Here are the reasons, courtesy of the United States Savings and Loan League:

1. INTEREST RATES. Over the past several decades, there has been a steady decline in home mortgage interest rates. In 1900, the typical rate was 8 to 10 percent; today it is 5 percent.

2. MORTGAGE TERMS. From 1900 to 1925, the usual type mortgage matured in one to five years. Today terms have been extended in nearly all cases to 12-15 years; in many others to 20 years and in a few to 25 years.

3. EQUITY REQUIREMENTS. Home loans have increased substantially percentagewise, in ratio to appraised value. "However, a stable mortgage structure will always demand a realistic amount of equity from home buyers," it was emphasized.

4. DEBT PAYMENTS. Under the old-style short-term mortgage loan, the borrower invariably had to pay the full principal when the loan came due. Today the principal is amortized with each monthly repayment.

Rochester Stepping Up Tree and Shrub Planting

ROCHESTER, N. Y., has gone all out on conservation in its tree planting for the coming spring. One hundred and twenty-five thousand trees and 16,000 shrubs are to be set out, according to the Yates County Soil Conservation District cooperators. This is the greatest number planted in any season. Since 1941 the district has supervised the planting of 700,000 trees and shrubs on 650 acres in Yates County.

Trees include red pine, white pine, Scotch pine, larch, black locust, and Norway spruce. The 16,000 shrubs include multiflora rose, silky cornel, nannyberry and Tartarian honeysuckle. In addition, Lespedeza, a plant grown extensively in the South, will be introduced for the first time in Yates County. Lespedeza is a favorite food of pheasants and partridge. If it will survive the winters, the plant will be in great demand by wildlife enthusiasts.

Through the cooperation of the New York State Conservation Department, Fish and Game Division, soil district aids will arrange for labor to plant the majority of trees. Many farmers will plant their own trees. A crew of high school boys will assemble to plant trees this spring.

All agricultural and homemaking organizations in Yates County have been invited to send their presiding officers to a special training school. Sponsored by three departments of the Yates County Farm and Home Bureau and 4-H Club Association, the school is designed to help officers conduct business meetings. Professor Robert Clark of Cornell University will conduct the school.

Of results obtained in such training schools, Gilbert C. Smith, Yates County agricultural agent, says: "It is often noticeable that many young people who have had this type of training in 4-H Clubs, FFA, or other organizations, can put their elders to shame when it comes to conducting a business meeting. We hope that this school will be helpful to those who have been elected to these positions of responsibility, without benefit of any special training for their job."

Demand for farm equipment this year possibly may not reach the boom proportions of 1949, but it should continue to be well sustained. This is due to the relatively high level of farm income, notwithstanding some noticeable price declines, and to the recognition by farmers of the role of modern mechanization.

Mixed fertilizers present a problem for farmers this year. To get the maximum amount of well-cured fertilizer on New York farms in the spring, farmers should place all orders as soon as possible, Professor Kroth of the department of agronomy at Cornell advised. A two-month strike in the potash industry was settled recently, but the expected increase in potash this year has been lost and the supply may be even less than in 1949. A good share of the 1950 supply of mixed fertilizers was necessarily mixed after the middle of February, according to Professor Kroth.

ADA Will Hear Mrs. Roosevelt On Saturday

About 650 members of the Americans for Democratic Action are expected to convene here next weekend for the group's third annual convention at the Shoreham Hotel. The meeting starts Friday morning.

The convention banquet Saturday night will be addressed by Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, United States delegate to the United Nations, and Secretary of Agriculture Charles F. Brannan. Judge William H. Hastie of the 3d Circuit Court of Appeals in Philadelphia will preside.

During Saturday afternoon about 40 members of Congress including 11 Senators will participate in five legislative work sessions on civil rights, agriculture and resources development, labor and education, social welfare and economic planning and foreign affairs.

Platform commissions will be headed by Reinhold Niebuhr, professor at the Union Theological Seminary in New York, foreign policy; Frank W. McCulloch, administrative assistant to Senator Paul H. Douglas (D., Ill.), political policy, and George C. Edwards, former president of the Detroit, Mich., City Council, domestic policy.

The Saturday morning session will be keynoted by Governor Chester Bowles of Connecticut with Senator Hubert H. Humphrey (D., Minn.), national chairman of ADA, making the opening address.

Previous conventions were held in Philadelphia and Chicago.

Time to Clean Your Home's Dirty Face

ANY day now the lady-of-the-house will get that look in her eye and spring cleaning will start.

Nationally, this clean-up urge has been titled "Clean-up Week" and is observed by nearly 10,000 communities. Here are some suggestions for your home spring clean-up.

1. Clear out all rubbish, newspapers, magazines, rags, that may have collected in closets, attic or garage. They can start a fire or add fuel to one. If you burn rubbish, don't do it on a windy day when sparks can be carried a distance.
2. Put oily rags and paint cloths in closed metal containers.
3. Look over electric cords. Have frayed ones repaired. Do not run them under rugs or through doorways. Use only 15 ampere fuses in household circuits. Take broken electric appliances to a qualified electrician. The home handyman may be enthusiastic, but inexpert.
4. Get the advice of an electrician before adding new electricial appliances to an already heavily loaded circuit.
5. Remove all dangerous flammable liquids, such as gasoline, from the house. Gasoline fumes are always explosive. If drycleaning must be done at home use only fluids listed by Underwriters' Laboratories, Inc.
6. Have the furnace cleaned in readiness for fall, particularly if it burns oil, wood or soft coal, which leave soot deposits. Check the walls around the chimney all the way to the roof. A spot too hot for the hand is a danger signal, indicating need for repairs. Provide a metal container in the basement for hot ashes.
7. Always keep a wire mesh screen in front of the fireplace to keep sparks from flying out, and to protect children.
8. Refuse which has collected in vacant lots in the neighborhood may be a menace to health as well as a fire hazard. Get your neighbors interested in the community clean-up, and clean up those lots. Your neighborhood will be more attractive and your children will have a safer place to play.

This housewife is preparing for next Winter by talking over needed repairs to the home heating system with a repairman

An attic full of boxes, newspapers and other odds and ends is another locale for your spring clean-up

ABC Charges Lewd Singing At Restaurant

Two charges that a restaurant let its premises be used for an unlawful purpose by permitting entertainers to sing "indecent and lewd songs" will be heard Thursday at 10 a. m. by the District Alcoholic Beverage Control Board.

The Friendly Tavern, 643 D st. nw., is charged with a total of seven counts of use for an unlawful purpose, four counts of sale and delivery to an intoxicated person and one count of permitting use of premises by a patron for a disorderly purpose (loud and profane language). The offenses allegedly occurred on February 17, 22 and 23, according to the ABC office.

Other cases to be heard by the board this week include:

Tuesday, 10 a. m., Lane's Liquor Locker, Inc., retail liquor store at 3108-10 Rhode Island ave. ne., charged with purchasing and receiving stolen property (beer) being shipped in interstate commerce, and with use of its premises for an unlawful purpose.

The Red Cross home accident survey for last week, released yesterday, showed accidental poisonings occurred to children who ate and drank the following:

Six ounces of worm medicine (intended for a dog), camphorated oil, lye crystals, nail polish and nail polish remover, hair tonic and cathartics.

Adult Mistakes, Too

One 2-year-old devoured 40 grains of aspirin.

But adults made mistakes, too. One drank paint remover, mistaking it for cough syrup.

You're not always safe even in bed. One young woman dislocated her shoulder while turning over in bed.

Most unusual case was that of a small boy who swallowed an open safety pin that lodged in his esophagus for several days. He underwent surgery at Episcopal Hospital.

Two Fatally Burned

Two adults died from fatal burns at home and one woman died from an accidental gunshot wound.

The breakdown for the week: 49 falls, 18 burns, 9 accidental poisonings, 4 foreign bodies, 44 cuts, 4 bruises and 13 miscellaneous. Total: 141 persons.

Rooftop Kitchen

Pittsburgh, Pa.—A single story home with two kitchens—one on the first floor and another on a rooftop observation porch—is the latest idea in housing, reports the director of the Westinghouse Better Homes Bureau. The rooftop kitchen is ideal for preparing light meals in warm weather.

Easy on the eyes

Inside and out Ford's more beautiful than ever for '50. Ford's new baked-on colors are "built to live outdoors." Sparkling new upholstery fabrics make Ford's interiors a joy to behold. And for comfort—you'll find Ford's new non-sag seats are hard to beat for relaxation.

Easy on the ears

Now, "hushed" to a whisper, Ford's V-8 engine delivers its lively horsepower so smoothly you can hardly hear it—and the "sound conditioning" of Ford's 13-ways-stronger "Lifeguard" Body gives you a quiet ride that really spells q-u-a-l-i-t-y.

Easy on the purse

For hundreds less than they're getting for most "sixes" you can own a Ford "eight." And even at this low price you get Ford's low, level "Mid-Ship" Ride . . . Ford's 35% easier-acting King-Size Brakes . . . Ford's "Finger-Tip" Steering . . . and all the other features that make Ford the one fine car in the low-price field.

FORD AUTOMATIC OVERDRIVE pays off in savings and smoothness of operation. It's an automatic fourth speed or cruising gear. Engine speed drops 30% while the car speed remains unchanged. And should you require a burst of extra power, simply push through on the accelerator pedal and you return automatically to third gear. *Optional at extra cost.

Training in Ballet Often Proves Springboard to Dramatic Roles

By Richard L. Coe

THIS WEEK'S visit by the Ballet Theater prior to its long European tour points up the role played by the dancing world in creating our entertainers.

It's generally accepted that training for theater and the movies should include ballet, tap and sound study of all dance forms, but it's sometimes forgotten that some of our straight actors began in the dance world and that the evolution of many current favorites is clearly going on right now.

Jean Arthur, for instance, is about to play "Peter Pan" (yes, the Maude Adams role, with Boris Karloff as Captain Hook) and the film comedienne's unsuccessful attempt to get Jerome Robbins to create some dances for her has had New York balletomanes smiling. Robbins, whose "Fancy Free" is on Wednesday night's Ballet Theater program, is a busy fellow and it would cost a pretty penny to lure him into designing movement for a straight play.

Take Gene Kelly

ONLY THE other day the fellow who's been doing so much for dancing in the movies was playing a straight role on the Capitol screen, Gene Kelly in "The Black Hand." Kelly made that one after an accident to his ankle, while his valuable leg was in a cast.

One never fails to marvel, during the dancing scenes of Kelly's musicals, about the long, arduous hours of obscurity that flowered into his easy grace and watching him move in "The Three Musketeers" was a lesson for all actors.

Another young dancer recently gone over to the movies is James Mitchell, whose dour dancing of the Sword Dance and the Forest Scene made him outstanding in "Brigadoon." Mitchell will soon be seen giving an interesting, taut performance in "Stars in My Crown" and though he has no immediate picture set after that one, his straight acting should guarantee him more.

THE OTHER night in New York Valerie Bettis charmed everyone with her straight moments in the lead of Vinton Freedley's new musical, "It's Great to be Alive." Miss Bettis is a Hanya Holm, Ballet Russe alumna and her skill at mime is a direct result of her long ballet training.

Also in the cast of that one is another ballet favorite, Bambi Linn, a Ballet Theater girl whose dancing in "Oklahoma!" and "Carousel" brought her to Eva Le Gallienne's revival of "Alice in Wonderland."

And while Ray Bolger has based his career on his dancing (remember the "Slaughter on Tenth Avenue" number in "On Your Toes"?), it is his neat comedy style that has kept "Where's Charley" going over 600 performances after initial notices that weren't quite raves. And Ray's work as a comic in "The Wizard of Oz" remains a movie highlight.

How About Tamara?

TAMARA GEVA, who did that "On Your Toes" number with Ray, had a distinguished career with Balanchine and Danilova before her American successes. Miss Geva starred in such straight dramatic roles as "Idiot's Delight" and "Dark Eyes." In the cast of that comedy was another famed dancer turned legit actress, Irina Baronova, who went from the Paris Opera ballet to our Ballet Theater, Ballet Russe and is now sticking to straight dramatic roles.

"Kiss Me Kate" has offered two outstanding male dancers opportunity to broaden. Harold Lang worked privately on his voice and he sounds pretty good in the Cole Porter score, a follow up to a good start in "Look, Ma, I'm Dancin'." In Lang's role in the Chicago company is Marc Platt, the Seattle boy who appeared with both of the Ballets Russes before creating "Oklahoma's!" dancing Curly and hitting the movies.

Now a popular singing comedienne, Betty Bruce, got started in a fashion that would surprise many. As a child she studied with Fokine and appeared in ballets of the Metropolitan Opera.

Miss Gardiner, Too

WASHINGTON'S own Lisa Gardiner, who has spanned her career from her days with Pavlova to her present busy venture with Mary Day, the Washington School of the Ballet, also had her straight performance career, a speaking role in Morris Gest's "Mecca."

England's dancers are no different. The lovely Moira Shearer, so beautiful in the Trans-Lux' current "Red Shoes" acted so well in that ballet film that picture offers have poured in. You can count on seeing a combination of her classical dancing and an acting role again within a year.

A solid hit in Broadway's current T. S. Eliot play is Eileen Peel. Miss Peel began as a dancer, understudied Gertrude Lawrence in "Charlot's Revue" and gradually drifted from dancing to the straight dramatic role of this season.

Anton Dolin is an English dancer who got his first taste of playing straight with Beatrice Lillie in the "Life with Father" spoof in "Seven Lively Arts." Now you find him acting straight roles on the citronella circuit and seriously plotting a straight acting career for the days when his dancing is over.

Also Helpmann

MOST SUCCESSFUL of England's dancers dramatically speaking is the Sadler's Wells' remarkable Robert Helpmann. This recent visitor to Constitution Hall, has acted many straight parts in England, including a highly praised Hamlet at Stratford.

Most remarkable, perhaps, of such transitions is that of Vera Zorina, the Ballet Russe star who went, via the musicals and the movies, into Broadway Shakespeare and speaking roles for Honnegger's "Joan" with the New York Philharmonic-Symphony and other orchestras.

And how about Clifton Webb, one of our most versatile gentlemen? He was a dancer, kids, long before you were born (he also sang tenor leads in opera) and now he's one of the most sought-after of movie males.

And who is likely to forget that Joan Crawford, even if it was the Charleston and not a chaconne, danced her way into heavy movie drama, as did Ginger Rogers?

So this week, when watching Ballet Theater, it's perfectly possible you'll also be seeing a non-dancing star of the future.

Toots Shor Is His Own Best Customer

By Tex McCrary and Jinx Falkenburg

LIKE George Bernard Shaw's, Toots Shor's quotes are growing into a legend:

Shor, on midnight drinking curfew: "Okay with me. If a guy can't get drunk by midnight, he ain't tryin'!"

Shor, on Shakespeare's Hamlet, spoken during first intermission: "I'm probably the only guy in the audience who don't know what's gonna happen in the next act!"

Shor, on handling stars, spoken to Charlie Chaplin, who was waiting for a good table on a busy afternoon: "This is liable to be quite a wait—be funny for the customers!"

Shor, on handling tycoons, spoken to Louis B. Mayer, head of MGM, who warned Toots his food better be good: "I wouldn't complain if I was you—I've seen some of your pictures!"

No-Hitter Day

TOOTS remembers every event in his career in connection with some sporting event—for instance, he remembers that on the day his restaurant opened in 1939, Tex Carleton pitched a no-hitter for Brooklyn. But the day of April 2, 1945, he remembers proudly as, "The day Mr. Truman came into my saloon!"

The day Toots opened his place, he was down to his last 40 cents—"We were scheduled to open at 5 o'clock in the afternoon. Around 4:30, I started over to the joint from my hotel on Lexington and 44th—I wanted to take that walk alone, jingling that 40 cents in my pocket—one quarter, one dime and five pennies, all I had in the world.

"When I got out in front of my place, I turned around and gave a long look at those big gray buildings looming up out of Rockefeller Center . . . beautiful! And me opening up right under their nose. I took my 40 cents and heaved it over at Rockefeller's place and walked into Toots Shor's—the joint was jammed! It's been like that ever since . . ."

Haila Keeps The Kiddies Near at Hand

HAILA STODDARD
. . . she calls him T. J.

By Orval Hopkins

UP UNTIL just the other day I had never been in an actress' dressing room. Here it is Sunday and I still haven't. However, I made a brave pass at the dressing room of Haila Stoddard, the actress last week. Miss Stoddard, we ought to report in the interest of keeping things journalistically shipshape, is playing the wry secretary, Miss Wood, in Fay Kanin's comedy, "Goodbye, My Fancy," now at the Gayety Theater (perf. tonight 8:30, mats. Wed. & Sat.).

After slogging through a gentle rain to the Gayety, I rendezvoused with Scott Kirkpatrick, associate agent, and he hauled me backstage. We struggled up a steep iron staircase and Scotty puffed something about seeing Miss Stoddard "in her dressing room."

"Dressing room!" echoed a feminine voice. "Haw!" Turns out that Faye Emerson, star of the show, and Miss Stoddard have adjacent primping quarters and I couldn't be sure who cast that aspersion on our Gayety. Anyway, Kirkpatrick introduced me to Miss Stoddard. She said she'd be available presently. I took the opportunity to sneak next door and meet Miss Emerson, who drove me from the room with shrill cries when I brought up a movie she had appeared in.

Youngest Here

MISS STODDARD emerged in a moment, we negotiated the steep staircase, and walked onto the set of "G., M. F." One end of a couch was bathed in the light of a baby spot. We scuffled for the lighted seat, but I lost and sat sulking at the other end of the couch while Miss Stoddard told me about the four children she and Harald Bromley have managed to corral. (I opened by starting to brag about my almost innumerable offspring, but she tied me up easily.) Bromley is coproducer with Eunice Healy of the play at the Gayety.

Miss Stoddard's youngest is with her here. "What's his name?" I demanded. Miss Stoddard hung her head. "Tarquin," she muttered. "But we call him T. J." brightening. "His sister Robin, who's 11, is with him this

What's Good About Music On the Video

By Paul Hume

TIME MAGAZINE last week carried this statement by Charles Denny, executive vice president of NBC:

"People like what television is giving them. And no wonder! It . . . provides the finest in drama, ballet, and music . . ."

Our eyes bulged. Not that we live by a television set. Not that we even own one. But we were flabbergasted to think that television was forging ahead so nobly in fields long neglected by radio.

The more we thought about it, the more we decided we ought to find out what we were missing. Maybe we should change our mind about wanting one of the machines in the house.

Week's Check

BUT before rushing to the nearest dealer, we felt it might be fair to check the television programs for a week. So we did—covering Washington's four TV stations, representing CBS, NBC, ABC, and DuMont TV.

Their grand total of shows with any good—classical—music was ONE hour a week, regularly, with a half-hour show every other week.

And before you think that is an impressive figure, let me hasten to add that the one hour is divided this way: A half hour each week is the simulcast of the Firestone Hour. The other half hour is an estimate of "one fifth of a 2½-hour show given to a production using modern ballet sequences."

Perhaps Denny's network shows more good music and ballet in and around New York, but that is hardly worthy of his comment.

We can wait before ordering our television set, at least if we want it for any good music.

How About Radio?

BUT LET'S take a look at radio these days. If you insist on hearing your good music "live" on the air, the picture is about what it was a year ago.

CBS presents the New York Philharmonic every Sunday afternoon. This year the network has assumed the added burden of carrying the program without any commercial sponsor. This is important not only because it represents a loss to the network, but also because the orchestra loses income also.

The same network offers the Philadelphia Orchestra Saturday afternoons on an indefinite basis, again paying the cost itself. Immediately after the Philadelphia Orchestra, NBC gives its own orchestra an hour.

The NBC Symphony is heard about 40 weeks in the year, with a lightweight summer series replacing it. It brings the American radio public great conductors, Toscanini, Ansermet, Kleiber, and others.

ABC is the opera network, with the Metropolitan every Saturday afternoon. Its local outlet, WMAL, is currently airing the National Symphony Orchestra's neighborhood concerts.

Washington Music

CONFINING our inquiries to the Washington airwaves, it is encouraging to see the number of stations broadcasting some good music available locally. WMAL, in addition to the National Symphony broadcasts, is # 16 Shows Switched to D. C.

By Sonia Stein

DON'T get in the way of anybody running into the Warner Building. It's beginning to look as if 99 per cent of them are newsmen, dashing to WTOP to feed news to the world.

CBS has just switched 16 network news shows from New York to Washington for their origination, so that by the time everything is in the works April 3, there will be a total of 30 CBS network news shows per week being aired from WTOP, including the Ed Murrow show, since he is temporarily based in Washington and will continue here through April. So WTOP now seems to hold the loving cup for Washington-originated news shows.

MURROW

Among WTOP's local shows is a Saturday night (6:45 to 7) gimmick in which Allan Jackson calls on suburban stations for latest developments in the outlying areas. "Come in, Silver Spring!" type of thing.

Curiously enough, Jackson just got the assignment to do that kind of thing for the 9 a. m. daily News of America show which was one of the shows moved by CBS to Washington. "Come in, Toledo."

Incidentally, WTOP has been getting fan mail from the island of Jersey, in the English Channel. WTOP, "heard 10 nights out of 10," heads the list of American stations this Jersey man can get. He mentioned a liking for "Mr. Gene Klavan," WTOP's after-midnight man. Goes to show a man has to go a couple of thousand miles to be called Mister.

Still, a fraternity group at Maryland University says Klavan "deserves to be called an artist," and that's not bad, either. (Found that out sneak-peaking at Klavan's mail the day I decided to use his typewriter for inspiration. Turns out he uses Publicity Man Cody Pfanstiehl's typewriter for inspiration.)

DON'T look now (but do look Saturday nights at 9:30, WOIC) to see the woman who seems to be winning the unofficial title of "The WOMAN."

Rather unexpectedly, after playing some strange types in the movies, Faye Emerson has arrived on the TV scene as the woman men admire, and the woman other women don't resent for being the woman men admire. That does it, it seems to me.

On her television show (telecast Mondays in New York but carried by kinescope in Washington Saturdays) Miss Emerson seems to be all that a woman should be. Dimpled, shapely, warm of spirit, witty but not caustic, wise but not overbearing.

In Washington this week and next for "Goodbye, My Fancy," at the Gayety Theater, Miss Emerson could be cornered. She had to admit that her fan mail bears out my contention, since 65 to 70 per cent of it comes from married women, most of whom say "my husband adores you" but who do not seem to resent it at all.

This is a fortunate happenstance, Miss Emerson says, since her sponsor, Arnold Bread, presumably wouldn't want to antagonize the little woman who fills the market basket.

Tucked Away

WHEN she was a little girl, Miss Emerson admired "little fragile women," since her mother was one. When she grew up she began to admire independent women. But she's managed to keep her independence primarily financial and tucked away where it doesn't show. "I don't like women who let their ambition show like a hanging petticoat," she says.

As for brains, Miss Emerson says it's not necessary for a woman to be brainy to be charming. "She just has to use what brains she has. It's quite a bit like making the most of your looks by being well groomed," says Miss Emerson.

Miss Emerson reads—well, glances at—seven newspapers a day, tries to keep her store of general knowledge replenished.

She goes at her task of interviewing guests much the way a good hostess at a dinner party does it. As long as the guest is at ease, he's apt to come out with some brilliant stuff sooner or later. "Sometimes I have to chatter like a magpie to fill in until

Impresarios Looking to Greener Fields

By Mark Barron

NEW YORK, March 25 (AP).—Broadway theater producers are now becoming aware that audiences are not merely the hurry-scurry crowds confined to the Times Square theatrical district seeking tickets for major hits.

The managers are adjusting themselves to the long established idea that there is a national theater flourishing, and that they can no longer withhold themselves to Broadway audiences.

Today, the additional national companies are sent into rehearsal almost immediately after it is determined that such a show as "South Pacific," "Kiss Me, Kate" and "Death of a Salesman" is an established hit.

Going Touring

AND, going beyond this, some of the current hits on the Rialto are going touring in the cooler climes this summer, shutting up their sultry Broadway houses and planning to return to New York in the fall. New Yorkers, when their arms are twisted, will admit that the climate here is pretty depressing in the July-August days when shows are attempting to survive until the beginning of the new fall season.

So several of the current Broadway hits which could survive through the summer are shutting up shop.

Among the hits on Broadway which have decided on this new formula are "Lost in the Stars," "Caesar and Cleopatra" and "I Know My Love."

Now one of the topmost hits on Broadway, this "Lost in the Stars" story of tragic problems and human solutions of life in British South Africa will close on Broadway July 29. The entire production of this musical classic—with Todd Duncan and Leslie Banks still playing their starring roles—will move to San Francisco and Los Angeles for an eight-week season. They will then move back to Broadway in October.

Too Hot?

"CAESAR AND CLEOPATRA," with Sir Cedric Hardwicke and Lilli Palmer in the leading roles of the Bernard Shaw comedy, is closing June 3 and will reopen in the fall. There are two possibilities that arise here:

1. The hot summer weeks are not inspiring for Shaw audiences.

2. Mary Scott, a pretty and talented California brunette who plays Charmian in this exciting production, is scheduled soon to become Lady Hardwicke, so the play may be merely closing down for a wedding.

In either case, it will reopen in the fall.

The summer closing of "I Know My Love" is understandable since Alfred Lunt and Lynn Fontanne want to start moving after they close June 3. That is, start moving toward summer vacation in their Wisconsin rural gardens before they start their travels with "I Know My Love" in early fall.

And, you may rest assured that after trouping that comedy all over the United States, Alaska and Hawaii, the Lunts will return with it to Broadway.

Howard to Do Original Play; Maryland U. Offers 'Othello'

THE original-play epidemic which has hit Washington amateur theater in the past month has spread to Howard University, which starts a run of "Boys Without Pennies" Tuesday night.

This, a first play by a student, Theodore P. Smith, is a city-slum melodrama of a boy who buckles under a heavy load of misfortune.

Owen Dodson is directing. Instructor at the university, Dodson has written "Bayou Legend," produced by the Howard Players in 1948, and a volume of poetry published not long ago. He directed "Mamba's Daughters" which the cast took on the European tour.

Michael Curry, technical director, designed the set.

President of the Howard Players, Stanley Paige plays the male lead, with Theodore Lowe playing the alternate lead. Barbara Fischer has the female lead. Others in the cast include Shanelille Perry, Herbert Davis, Stewart Street, Charles White and Mary Nelson.

The performance will last through April 1, 8:30 p. m. in Spaulding Hall. For reservations call Dupont 6100, extension 517.

VILLAINESS: Val Rothschild has the feminine threat role in "This Is It," the original intimate musical being presented Wednesday through Saturday nights by the new Georgetown Theater group in the auditorium of Christ Church, 31st and O sts. nw.

Othello at Md. U.

MARYLAND University's "Othello" directed by Elmer Barraclough, instructor in the speech department, starts a week's run tomorrow night. Barraclough directed Moliere's "Imaginary Invalid" in a central stage production last year.

Sayre Harris, technical director, has designed a stylized set using a curtain in the middle of the stage in order to change scenes effectively.

Ken Calfee has the powerful role of Othello. He did well as Cyrano not long ago. Lou Piccoli plays Desdemona, and other members of the cast include Bernard Shur, Pernell Roberts, Pete Campanelli, Jim Coyne, Beverly Smith and Sue Lewis.

Warfield 3800 is the number to call for tickets. ROBIN DORR.

Evening Show Is on Tonight At the Gayety

THERE will be a performance of "Goodbye, My Fancy" tonight at the Gayety Theater at 8:30. This performance will take the place of tomorrow evening's, when star Faye Emerson will be occupied with her television show.

Miss Emerson's appeal is exactly suited to the charm of the starring role. Bramwell Fletcher, who has been seen in many distinguished Washington productions, has the role of the college president whose romancing with the Congresswoman 20 years before cut short her college career.

The performance has been directed by Sam Wanamaker, who directed the original. Wanamaker also recreates his original role of the Life photographer, a cynically humorous fellow. The actor recently returned from making "Salt to the Devil" in England, a film which shortly will open the new Plaza Theater on New York ave.

Completing the quartet of stars in the leading roles is Haila Stoddard, an exceptionally popular Washington visitor at both the National and the Olney. Miss Stoddard makes much of the comedy part of the Congresswoman's secretary.

Others in the cast include Aline McDermott, Helen Harrelson, Patty Pope, Alison Prescott, Marie Phillips, Tom Donovan, Dortha Duckworth, Katherine Squire, George Mitchell and Hugh Rennie.

The Gayety is playing Wednesday and Saturday matinees.

How Streetcar Got Its Name

THE title of Tennessee Williams' prize-winning play, "A Streetcar Named Desire" has intrigued, baffled and charmed theatergoers.

Here is the explanation from the author on the meaning of the title of his drama, which will be presented at the Gayety Theater for a three-week engagement beginning April 3 with matinees Wednesday and Saturday afternoons under the sponsorship of Irene M. Selznick. Judith Evelyn, Ralph Meeker, Jorja Curtright and Jim Nolan head the cast.

Says Williams: "I have lived on and off for the past 10 years in New Orleans, where the action of 'A Streetcar Named Desire' is laid. Past my window, down Royal st., two streetcars would make their interminable way, clanging and rattling and generally making sure they would not be disregarded. One was actually named DESIRE and the other CEMETERY, those being the curious names of the sections for which they headed. One of the characters in my play is brought into the scene on the streetcar named DESIRE which for her comes to have a symbolic bearing of a broad nature on life in that quarter of New Orleans, and everywhere else for that matter."

BARTERITES: Joan DeWeese and Herbert Nelson have the leads in Robert Ardrey's "Thunder Rock," which will be presented by Virginia's Barter Theater Thursday night at the Washington-Lee High School. The performance is being sponsored by the Arlington Civic Federation and seats are on sale downtown at the Willard Hotel

C. U. to Continue 'Oedipus Rex'

Catholic University's speech and drama department will continue into its final week of "Oedipus Rex" tomorrow evening. The Sophocles drama closes Saturday night.

Alan Schneider has directed the tragedy in a new adaptation by Robert Fitzgerald and Dudley Fitts and Dr. Josephine McGarry Callan has supervised the choral and individual speaking.

Bill Callahan and Teddy Marie Kinsey head the cast which further includes Warner Schreiner, Stan Telchin, Patricia Kielty, Frank McNutt, William McGuire and David Pritchard.

Fairlington's Comedy Opens Thursday

Moss Hart's comedy about the pitfalls of trying out a new play, "Light Up the Sky," will be played by the Fairlington Players Thursday and Friday nights in the Arlington Farms recreation hall.

William T. Chichester of the Army's Special Services Division, is directing the company, with Kyda Dennis, Earl Weatherwax, Carol Lynn Chichester and Harry Cary, among those in the cast.

Seats may be obtained at the recreation hall, Glebe 6900, or Miss Sue Evans, Temple 0440.

'Overture to Glory'

Wednesday night will bring the first new Yiddish film to Washington in over two years, when the Jewish Community Center presents "Overture to Glory," staring the singing cantor, Moishe Oysher. The showing will be held in the Cafritz auditorium at 8:30 by the organization's Film Theater group.

Here Comes the Dance Bands Again—II

THE GOLDEN era of dance extended from the mid-1930s to the mid-40s. If RCA Victor has its way, those days will come again; and just to show how good the popular orchestras sound today, Victor has released a series of 15 albums under the title "Here Comes the Dance Bands Again," which I spoke of last week.

In any event, one need not refer nostalgically to the days of yesteryear when the dance bands were producing imaginative arrangements of popular songs. Their finest efforts have been perpetrated for us on records which are still among the most requested items each week from the vast Sundial and Moondial library.

A glance at some of those records will show why I term those years "the golden era." Surely there is no orchestral record of the moment to compare with Artie Shaw's "Begin the Beguine"; or Glenn Miller's "In the Mood"; or Tommy Dorsey's "Marie." And requests still pour in for "String of Pearls" by Benny Goodman; "You Made Me Love You" by Harry James; "I Can't Get Started With You" by Bunny Berigan; "Deep Purple" by Larry Clinton; and such other Glenn Miller favorites as "Moonlight Serenade," "Tuxedo Junction" and "Kalamazoo."

WHY did the golden era come to an end? Strangely enough, two of the most popular bandleaders of that day helped to bring it to a close. I refer to Tommy and Jimmy Dorsey.

If you glance at the records I've mentioned above, you will note that in each of them the vocalist is either blended inconspicuously into the scheme of things, or is absent altogether. The Dorsey Brothers, on the other hand, began to feature their singers more and more, using the orchestra mainly for purposes of accompaniment.

The records were good, too. Jimmy Dorsey's "Green Eyes" and "Amapola," with the spotlight on vocalists, Bob Eberly and Helen O'Connell, are still classics of their kind. But it was another record which really brought an end to the craze for "name" bands on records, in stage shows, and at college proms and dance halls everywhere. The record was Tommy Dorsey's "I'll Never Smile Again." It, like the others, helped bring the death knell to popular orchestras not because it was so bad, but because it was so good.

In "I'll Never Smile Again," as everyone knows, Tommy Dorsey featured his vocalist, Frank Sinatra. And when people started swooning over Sinatra, the days of the name bands were numbered. Popular acclaim was lavished on Perry Como, Vic Damone and Frankie Laine; Benny Goodman, Tommy Dorsey, Artie Shaw and Harry James became fallen idols; and the golden era of popular orchestras came to a close.

Case of Search and Seize Hinges on Sales of Stamps

By William M. Stuart

A FEW WEEKS ago an interesting story condoning the practice of Federal Officers to search and seize, without a warrant, was reported in connection with a stamp case in Washington before the Supreme Court. The decision of the Supreme Court upheld the right of the Federal officers to search and seize without a warrant if such action is part of a lawful arrest. This action finally disposes of a case where a stamp dealer has been before the courts for several years.

STUART

The Postoffice Department's inspection service reported the dealer in question sold to an employe of the New York City Postoffice and a member of the staff of the Philatelic Research Laboratories, Inc., forged and counterfeit overprinted United States postage stamps bearing the overprints "Kansas" and "Nebraska." The dealer who sold the stamps was arrested February 16, 1943, and a large quantity of forged stamps were found in his shop. Several other dealers were arrested at the same time. However, it seems commendable even at this late date to have the matter legally settled.

There were 332,023 covers of the 3-cent Samuel Gompers stamp canceled first day at Washington, 546,889 stamps sold at the postoffice and 877,795 at the Philatelic Agency.

At Kitty Hawk, N. C., when the 6-cent Wright Brothers air mail commemorative stamp was placed on first day sale, 378,585 covers were canceled and 623,841 stamps sold.

The Bell Stamp Co., Box 1, Astoria 6, N. Y., has just issued its revised edition of a 1950 Plate Block price list which will be sent free to all who are interested.

THE COLLECTORS CLUB, Branch 5, S. P. A., met in Pythian Temple on Tuesday evening, A. J. Galloway presiding. The annual hobby show this year will be confined to members and an elaborate program for "boys night" will soon be announced. Next meeting Tuesday evening in Pythian Temple, 1012 9th st. nw.

J. H. Weimer, 3150 16th st. nw., will hold his 17th precancel auction on April 6 when all bids will close. There are 2081 lots listed, among the items being rare and scarce precancels.

The next meeting of the Capital Precancel Club will be held at Weeks Stamp Shop, 1229 New York ave. nw., tomorrow evening at 8 o'clock. The club's annual roundup will be held May 6 and 7 at the Dodge Hotel.

The Music Box
Great Greek Contralto Here April 3

ELENA NIKOLAIDI

ELENA NIKOLAIDI, great Greek contralto, makes her Constitution Hall debut on Monday evening, April 3.

Hailed as one of the finest artists of the past quarter century, it looks as if Miss Nikolaidi may be entitled to stand on that lonely eminence reserved for such artists as Jennie Tourel and Kirsten Flagstad. Her program in Holy Week will include several pieces with organ and violin as well as the customary piano.

She appears in a benefit for the Washington Committee and Trustees of Athens College in her native land.

A benefit for Georgetown University Hospital will be sung by the Music Clubs of Holy Cross College on April 12. The concert is set in the Shoreham Hotel.

BURL IVES returns this week to Constitution Hall. Tickets for his January 22 appearance will be honored this Saturday afternoon.

Miss Maud Sewall, for nearly 60 years a member of the Friday Morning Music Club, will be honored by the club this Friday morning in the Church of the Holy City.

HOW-Short-Is-The-Memory-Of-Man Department: Jussi Bjoerling's publicity for his recital this week quotes Edward Johnson as saying, "Until we got Bjoerling, the Met did not have a singer who could do it." Johnson was referring to the tenor role in Verdi's Masked Ball.

SHAW

It happens that the man who sang the role for the Met in 1916, when they last gave it until Bjoerling came along, was Giovanni Martinelli. And Martinelli was still singing regularly with the Met when Bjoerling made his debut. In seasons after the younger tenor arrived, Martinelli sang Radames, Canio, Otello, Pollione, Manrico, Alvaro, and Riccardo itself, the role in Masked Ball. Just for the record!

Don't miss the week's three B's: Bob Shaw, Ballet, and the Budapest. There will also be Bjoerling and Burl Ives.

Library of Congress

An exhibition of the "Fifty Books of the Year 1950" will open at the Library of Congress April 4. The show, originating with the American Institute of Graphic Arts, is being circulated throughout the country by the American Federation of Arts. It will be seen here at the Library through April 18.

The Record Player
Ballet Music by Rameau Excellently Done by Vox

RAMEAU: Les Indes Galantes. Irene Joachim, Camille Maurane, Gouverne Choir, Hewitt Chamber Orchestra. VOX DLP 6080. $5.95.

Vox is now issuing some of the finest items of Discophiles Francais. The French company explores rare treasures of the repertoire, notably 17th and 18th centuries. Its results are found on perfect recordings with the finest artists.

Reproduced on VOX long-playing records, we have within easy access some great additions to record libraries. Rameau, an early French giant, wrote operas, ballets, solo works, and large compositions, all with astonishing imagination.

"Les Indes Galantes" is a heroic ballet. Chorus, soloists and orchestra tell of the disgust of some ladies whose husbands kept running off to one war after another. These ladies arrange to have themselves transported magically to "the gallant Indies" where they may pursue the arts of love without interruption.

The "Indies" turn out to be Turkey, Peru, Persia, and other exotic lands which, in the 18th century, were thus described. Through all this winds some of the most gracious and dazzling vocal and instrumental writing of the period. Performance is brilliant and reproduction superb.

Irene Joachim, the same who sang Melisande on the beautiful French HMV recording several years ago, is a clear, cool, classic singer. Chorus and orchestra under Maurice Hewitt do more than one could ask.

If you need any further convincing about this, drop in at Constitution Hall this afternoon when Robert Shaw's chorus sings some of the music in the midst of its great program there.

Vox's price, $5.95, is about one third of the original cost of the European disks!

BARTOK: Roumanian Dances. Yehudi Menuhin, violinist, with Marcel Gazelle, pianist. Victor 12-1061. 95c.

Here is one of the finest records Menuhin has made in years, and some great music. You will like it, no matter how you feel about Bartok, folk music, or Menuhin. If you like one, or all of those, or perhaps even none, try this record. It is well pressed on domestic labels.

Originals were cut in England. They have rare balance between the two instruments. The music is richly melodic, but of flashing moods. Bartok was a supreme master of the folk music of his country and put these songs into most attractive form.

Francaix: Serenade for 12 Instruments. Hamburg Chamber Orchestra under Jochum. Capitol-Telefunken LP 8051. $3.95. Includes the previously recorded Concertino for piano and orchestra.

Music of charm, wit, rollicking writing. Clear recording of excellent ensemble, prewar caliber. This is a real gem in music and records. HUME

Haila Has New Idea for D. C.

afternoon. She's on spring vacation and leaves me tomorrow. T. J. is 14 months."

Haila is a busy young woman, not even counting the young foursome. She works in radio and television (thinks video will help the live theater, harm the movies) in addition to the theater, and scrambles all around the country in the summer time on the Strawhat Circuit. She and her husband also have some tall ideas about an arena-type theater near their home in Bedford, N. Y. They would plan to do operettas in the round their first summer season—perhaps in 1951—to rig the theater for heating and to go real high class with some Mozart operas ("They're actually musical plays," says Miss S.) and a few concerts for a winter program.

Maybe Here

THE Bromleys also have notions about doing operetta in the round here in Washington during the Sesqui business. It's still mostly tentative, but they're looking for a site. Miss Stoddard said the plot to bring Judy Holliday here in "Born Yesterday" isn't quite buried yet, but lacks only a couple of good shovelfuls of earth. Miss Holliday is going to play her starring role in the film version and shooting time is drawing dangerously near.

I walked Miss Stoddard to her hotel in the rain, just like in the movies. Bareheaded, she said she didn't have to worry about her hair for this part. I asked her if she remembered a man named Harry Young, a good actor and director I knew in Hawaii during the war. She said she certainly did and had high praise for old Young.

I left Miss Stoddard at the Raleigh entrance, sagely counseling her to get a nap before the evening performance.

"Oh, I don't need a nap for this role," she chirped. I said I'd urge everybody to go see "Goodbye, My Fancy."

Church Music For Today

Listed below is Lenten music to be heard today in some of the churches of Washington:

Washington Cathedral, 4 p. m., Paul Callaway, organist and choirmaster.
Sowerby: Forsaken of Man.

St. Margaret's Episcopal Church, 6 p. m., Robert Ruckman, organist and choirmaster.
Moore: The Darkest Hour.

St. John's, Lafayette Square, 7:30 p. m., Wesley Steele, organist and choirmaster.
Bach: St. Matthew's Passion, abridged.

First Congregational Church, 8 p. m., Whitford Hall, director.
The Life of Christ in Music and Scripture.

St. Paul's Church, 8 p. m., Russell Hinds, organist and choirmaster.
Maunder: Olivet to Calvary.

First Baptist Church, 8 p. m., Harwood Hall, Minister of Music.
Bach: Cantata No. 78.

Music on TV Falls Short

the outlet for the Hamilton Bank's musical talent contest being carried on in Washington's high schools.

WCFM carries the excellent programs of the National Gallery on Sunday evenings and occasional broadcasts from churches and other sources of good music.

The name of WQQW heads the list of Washington stations dedicated to the proposition that good music is what many people want available most of the time. The station has aired the Wednesday night and Sunday afternoon programs of the National Symphony.

It broadcasts regularly the unexcelled programs from the Library of Congress. And its FM equipment and technique result in the finest kind of reception. Last Sunday's broadcast of the National Symphony's Tschaikowsky program sounded better on our FM set than the New York Philharmonic over the AM channel. We have trouble with the local CBS-FM signal and could not make a fair comparison in that field.

Recorded Programs

WQQW also offers its Sunday listeners good live music by David Baker, an artistic baritone of the best repertoire and standards, and folk music and singing of a guitar and singing duo.

The greatest contributions to good music on the air, locally, and throughout the country, come from recorded music. Again WQQW is the bright star in Washington. It shows a conservative taste in programming that we would be happy to see broadened but it is an oasis many hours of the week.

WMAL has a high rate of good recorded music for a network station, with an hour before the Met broadcasts, an hour every night at midnight, and periods in the week at various times.

Not Much New

YOU still won't hear much music that's new or American on the radio. The appointment of Dimitri Mitropoulos as conductor of the New York Philharmonic will help that series in this direction.

The bulk of the good music that comes over the air is still recorded. Denny's remarks approach the absurd, unless local stations do not carry the TV culture he describes as "the finest in drama, ballet, and music."

Fratt Next At Library

THE show of paintings by Donald Robertson at the D. C. Public Library will be followed by an exhibit of water colors and drawings by Dorothy Miller Fratt, from April 3 to 29. Robertson's exhibit, which consists mainly of water colors and drawings, will continue through March 31. The artist is a native of Washington and a former Corcoran student. In 1939 he executed a mural for the postoffice in Picayune, Miss., on a Government commission. A former fellow of the Tiffany Foundation on Long Island, he has exhibited here and elsewhere previously, including the Corcoran Biennial of 1941.

The art department of American University is sponsoring the showing of a motion picture, "Exploration in Nepal," taken by Volkmar Wentzel for the National Geographic, to be given on Thursday, March 30, at 8:30 p. m. in Hurst Hall. The movie is the first to have been taken in that region. Wentzel will discuss the film as it is shown. Admission is free.

Paintings by a group of Washington artists are included in an exhibition at Washington Hebrew Congregation to remain until April 26. The art program is under the direction of Sydney Kallner.

Art Comes to the Working Man

By Jane Watson Crane

THE practice of holding exhibitions in clubs, libraries, and theaters, in places where people live and work, has taken hold in Washington and is continuing. For the most part the exhibits are part of planned programs. Presentation is in many cases excellent and the artist has the advantage of reaching people who do not ordinarily have time or inclination to visit the museums and galleries.

At the Playhouse, Laura Douglas is having her first solo exhibit in six years. She shares honors with the sculptor, Maxim Elias. The joint display is the latest in a series arranged by a committee headed by Prentiss Taylor, with the assistance of Franz Bader and Clare Fontanini.

Studied Abroad

LAURA DOUGLAS, a native of South Carolina, returned to this country in 1935 after several years of study and exhibition abroad. The current show consists mainly of recent work, with the inclusion of a few earlier pieces. The artist has always been a distinguished colorist. Among recent works which stand out are a figure composition, "The Five Oceans," and a large arrangement in pastel on canvas with underpainting in oil. "Memories of the MacDowell Colony" recalls her stay in the New Hampshire haven for artists which is still maintained by the composer's widow.

The show itself is testimony that she profited from the chance to work in tranquility, apart from the exactions of a teaching schedule.

Maxim Elias, who is a geologist with the Interior Department, has several small pieces in wood, metal, and stone. A few earlier sculptures, such as the wooden figure "Shy Girl," and the carving which won top award in a Washington Sculptors Group show, are included. Also shown is a new female figure in hammered lead. Elias is one of the most gifted and original sculptors in Washington. His exhibits, which are infrequent, invariably have something fresh and fully realized, for he applies thought as well as care.

AT THE Dupont an art committee also arranges the displays. It is headed by Beatrice Rudes, with Alonzo Aden, Jacob Kainen, and Kurt Wiener as members. Following the show of landscapes by Celine Tabary is a group of 20 paintings by Jozef Pielage. They include portraits, flower compositions and street scenes executed to fit the mood and subject. Also shown are some studies in which the artist has played around with color and form.

The painter, son of a Dutch conductor, has been living in Washington since 1940. His first show was held several years ago. It introduced the work of an informed and disciplined painter who commanded respect and attention but gave the impression of withholding through a certain reserve.

The current exhibit has more freedom, and there are canvases, such as the "Nude and Mirror," in which warm color sings out. There is a lovely still-life "Milkweed Pods," a self-portrait which does not spare its subject and a charming study of the artist's son. The group throughout reveals character and integrity.

THE United Nations Club is exhibiting oils by Lois Jones of the art department of Howard University. Added to her more familiar scenes of France are several paintings based on African themes, which spring from a recent visit to Liberia. The canvases, in the main more objective than subjective, are decorative and well handled.

THE Society of Washington Artists display at the Arts Club is a family affair, entries being confined to members' work. The earlier show at the National Museum, which was open to nonmembers, also was more selective, but the present group contains much good material in a wide variety of subject and treatment. Honorable mentions went to Arvin Hedin, Eugen Weisz, Mary Ballard Snow, painters, and Hazel Van Natter, sculptor. Our own roster would include works by Robert Willis, Shirley Lichtman, John C. Lewis, Clare Fontanini, and Garnet Jex as well.

3 Instructors At 'Y' Have Shows Going

The Y. M. C. A. has three of its art instructors in the adult education program with one-man shows at once—Laura Douglas, at the Playhouse; Jozef Pielage, at the Dupont, and Bruno Beran, whose exhibition of portraits has just opened at the Arts Club.

Newly elected members of the Washington Sculptors Group are Nan Brodsky, Antonio Cortizas, Mabel Perry Edwards, Brother Jude Giehl, and Kalervo Kallio. The group is planning two sculpture shows for the summer.

Posters and costume designs submitted in the recent contest conducted by the Arts Club of Washington in connection with the Bal Boheme will be shown at the Club on Saturday afternoon, April 1, in the Sketch Room.

The American Institute of Graphic Arts is planning a series of contests for young designers in the graphic arts. Three exhibitions, based on competitive selection by jury, are planned, for book design, commercial printing and magazine design. The first is the book design, to be held in November 1950. For full particulars, address the Institute, 115 East 40th st., New York City.

Today is the last day of the exhibition of illuminated manuscripts, ceremonial objects and contemporary paintings by Samuel Bookatz and Jack Perlmutter at the Arlington Jewish Center, Lee blvd. and South Fenwick st.

The Report Card

TV Cowboy Film Always Ends 'Then Dick's Ma Threw Us Out'

By Elsie Carper

My friend's son has a guilt complex. His parents haven't got a television set. He has to go to a neighbor's to see television. Socially, that makes him inferior. He can't have his friends over. The boy is only four years old, but he feels like the deadbeat in his neighborhood.

It's not that my friend can't afford a television set. It's just that she can't bear to have her living room constantly crowded with little boys dressed like Hopalong Cassidy.

She is beginning to think, though, that a television set at home would be an easier way out. She feels that, at least she would have some control over program selection.

Her boy now belongs to a roving band of preschool TV fans. Sent out to play, they disappear into darkened living rooms to catch the afternoon cowboy movie.

The boy returns home to relate in detail the plot of a movie he has just seen complete with a running account of the "pow, pow" of a gun battle. Invariably the story ends with "and then Dick's mother threw us out."

The compelling interest that children have in television, and particularly in cowboy movies, is hard to control. It is a strong parent who can regulate the use of television, particularly after the child has learned to turn a knob.

District school teachers are watching closely the effect that television is having on children and have noticed some curious results.

Standard attire of blue jeans, plaid shirts and western boots has given the classroom the appearance of a ranch bunkhouse and the playground looks like a miniature rodeo. Boys walk around bow-legged. Wide brimmed hats hang from hooks in school classrooms. It is accepted practice in schools to turn in holsters and guns when entering class.

Miss Ida M. Lind, director of elementary supervision, finds that interest in cowboys has reached the stage of hysteria.

Much of this interest is undesirable, she believes. Emotionally, children are not up to the excitement of a series of daily cowboy films featuring pitched gun battles.

Children who rush home from school and sit hunched up before a television screen are developing bad posture habits that carry over into the classroom. They are indoors when they should be out developing muscles.

One fear of teachers that television might turn children into a lot of squinting myopics has been largely dispelled. Reports to the National Society for the Prevention of Blindness indicate that watching television has no bad effect on eyes. Television, though, does test eye acuity. If a child squints, complains about his eyes or sits too close to a screen, he probably needs glasses anyway.

While television has its drawbacks for children it also has its good points.

My friend's little boy cannot yet read but he can pick out television advertised products when he visits the grocery store.

There is no question, said Miss Lind, that television alerts children to forms and shapes of words, makes them aware of likenesses and differences and prepares them for reading. This is all to the good, providing it does not push children beyond their level to absorb.

Television, too, stimulates a child's imagination. Stories that can be seen as well as heard are more compelling and better remembered.

Keith Johnson, head of the science department in District schools, has found that his two children have been advanced beyond their years in knowledge picked up from watching television shows. His four-year-old daughter is well acquainted with the story of Robin Hood, the result of a recent televised dramatization of the life of the friendly outlaw.

The public library is reserving judgment on the effect of television on reading habits.

Miss Maxine LaBounty, director of library work with children, said some youngsters report they don't need to read books anymore, that they have television, while others take out books that will amplify something they have seen on the TV screen.

Despite the increasing number of television antenna sprouting above housetops, book circulation among children constantly is growing. Cowboy stories, always popular, have the biggest turnover.

If You Get in a Jam, Count on Sun Valley

By Orval Hopkins

I ASKED everybody for some jokes. I pleaded and threatened. I held my breath. Nobody peeped. So I fell back on Sun Valley (that's about as close as I've ever gotten to the place). Take it away, S. V.:

BOB REILLY, of Steve Hannagan Associates, which has the Sun Valley, Idaho, account, sends me one which goes thusly: "The Pied Piper himself, trilling his bewitching flute, could spread his enchantment no better. For the alabaster slopes of Sun Valley's Dollar mountain, etc. . . . And instead of the enchanting lure of a mystic flute there is the wonderment of waxed boards upon which to glissade down the whiteness, and a towering magic carpet to whisk them, etc." I want to salute good old Reilly. We used to get rich beautiful prose like this in here all the time, but it's fallen off of late. I thought maybe the boys had caught on. Good going, Reilly.

THE NEW Capital Airlines manager of regional cargo sales here and in some neighboring cities is James G. Erwin, jr. He is a graduate of the University of Wisconsin, has been a pilot for 15 years, was a major during the war and once played professional ball with Duluth, Minn., in the Northern League (Class C). . . . Another note here says finishing touches have been made to a new swimming pool and cabana club which "actually extends out into the Atlantic" at the Belmar Hotel in Miami Beach. Albert and Paul Pollak are the managing directors of the Belmar.

ANOTHER BOOKLET, "Work, Study, Travel Abroad," is sent me with a cautioning note saying, "Please do not print that the booklet is free. This is incorrect." So let's get out of the way the facts that it costs two bits for students at colleges approved by the National Student Association and 50 cents for anybody else. Send to the United States NSA, 304 N. Park st., Madison 5, Wis. The pamphlet gives agencies to get in touch with ("contact" is the verb NSA used) for traveling during the summer months.

TRAIL RIDERS of the Wilderness, an outfit sponsored by the American Forestry Association here, has added another pack-trip to its list to make a total of 12 expeditions the group will conduct into remote areas this summer. The latest is a horseback trip into the Eagle Cap wilderness area of the Wallowa and Whitman National Forests of Eastern Oregon. It will be conducted from August 1 to 13 and only 25 riders will be accommodated. Other trips this summer include those into Snoqualmie National Forest in Washington, the Flathead-Sun river areas of Montana, the Sawtooth area of Idaho, and the White River National Forest of Colorado. Separate expeditions into the Great Smoky Mountains will be held in June and September. Riders share equally in the costs of these expeditions. For details write Mrs. Dorothy Dixon, American Forestry Association, 919 17th st. nw., Washington 6.

AMERICA'S GREAT Florida AND THE ROMANTIC SOUTH
YEAR-ROUND VACATIONLAND
LOTS OF PEOPLE Go Now
VACATION COSTS REDUCED!
Ever think of why so many people take spring vacations in the South? There are many sound reasons!
All nature is bursting into exotic semi-tropic splendor. Coming at winter's end it shortens the time until summer. Preceding summer, it lengthens that enjoyable season. Then, too, hotel rates and living costs are much lower! Your vacation dollars buy so much more.
And carfare by Coast Line train costs less than you probably think! For instance, consider how little a reserved seat costs on a streamlined coach! From Washington to Miami, $29.13; to Orlando, $23.63; to St. Petersburg, $26.26. (Plus Federal tax.) Other fares equally low. And you can save by buying round trip tickets.
Yes, there are sound reasons why so many prefer spring vacations. And why they prefer to travel by Coast Line train!
FIRST IN FLORIDA TRAVEL
More people travel to and from Florida by Coast Line than by any other railroad serving the State. With the newest-type Pullman, Coach, Tavern and Dining cars and with new, smooth, safety-protected roadbed, Coast Line is setting new high standards for Southern travel. So when making reservations and buying tickets, be sure to insist upon a Coast Line train by name.

Cave and Mountain Call Sunday Driver

By Walter W. Hubbard
American Automobile Association

HERE IS A trip of not over 190 miles which can be made in one day with a very early start, and which offers the contrasting variety of colorful caves under the earth's surface and the crest of the Blue Ridge Mountains.

Our start is made over U. S. 50—which runs from Annapolis, Md., to San Francisco, Calif.—through Falls Church, Va., and 14.5 miles to Centerville, on U. S. 29 and 211. Centerville is about 3 miles east of Bull Run and 7.2 miles northeast of Manassas, the triangle comprising much of the territory over which were fought the two battles of Bull Run.

Both clashes resulted in severe losses for the Union Army, Confederate Generals Beauregard and Lee having been the respective victors over the Federal Generals McDowell and Pope who took the "rap" in the first and second battles.

Gainesville, our next stop, is where the 41-year-old Gen. James Longstreet was based with the Dixie forces at the time he moved in to help defeat the "Feds." Here we make a right turn and take Virginia State highway 55 to The Plains, skirting the southern boundary of Delaplane and on into Front Royal, 36 miles from Gainesville.

Home of Academy

FRONT ROYAL, locale of the Randolph-Macon Military Academy, was once known as "Hell Town" in the early days. It was here that the lovely Belle Boyd, "Mata Hari" for the Confederacy, lured Union officers to a ball, May, 1862. While they slept, some of them intoxicated, Belle rode off to report to General Jackson, who attacked the next day, defeating the Federals. In addition to nearby Skyline Caverns, Front Royal is the gateway to the Skyline Drive which we shall make use of, for 33 miles, in driving to where the drive crosses U. S. 211 at Thornton Gap.

If the day turns out to be cloudy or rainy, the trip over Skyline Drive is not recommended by the AAA. Instead, State 12, southwest for 25 miles and through Overall, Va., is suggested.

If the weather is clear, then take the Skyline Drive where, at intervals along the way, are located parking overlooks which afford superb views of the Blue Ridge Mountains. Refreshments and lunch may be purchased at various stops.

10 Miles to Luray

TEN MILES west of picturesque Thornton Gap is Luray, situated in the Page Valley and separated from the main portion of the Shenandoah Valley by Massanutten Mountain. Three things there rank "top flight" in my book; the multicolored formation in the Luray Caverns; the food and commodious comfort of the Mimslyn Hotel, and the Singing Tower and its carillon. Any two of these three would more than justify a trip of 190 miles or thereabouts. To hear the bell tower concerts, it is but necessary to park the car nearby; there is no charge for admission to the grounds or for parking privileges.

From lovely Luray we commence our eastward trek back to Washington, driving to Thornton Gap and then on to Sperryville, and Amissville, and into Warrenton, seat of Fauquier County. It is in the very heart of a famous horse racing and fox hunting country. The Virginia Gold Cup Race, a steeplechase classic, is run here annually in May, and the event draws thousands of motorists to Warrenton.

Continuing eastward over U. S. 211, and 29, we reach Gainesville and from this point the AAA advises making use of the same route which brought us to Gainesville on our way to Front Royal and Luray.

Race to Mark Opening of Highway Section

PRESIDENT MIGUEL ALEMEN of Mexico will formally inaugurate on May 5 the Cristobal Colon (Christopher Columbus) hwy. To mark the completion of Mexico's link in the Pan American highway, the event will be highlighted by a five-day open speed race for stock cars.

More than 100 drivers are expected to compete for the $38,000 in prize money over the 2174-mile route, which runs from the United States border at Ciudad Juarez (across the Rio Grande from El Paso, Tex.) to El Ocotal on the Guatemalan frontier.

The highway is now paved all the way from Ciudad Juarez to Chiapa de Corzo, with the exception of several short gravel stretches which will be paved in time for the race. From Chiapa de Corzo to the Guatemalan border the present gravel stretch (all-weather surface) will be paved during 1950. The recently completed Pan American road link lies between the towns of Trinitaria and El Ocotal.

When Guatemala completes the difficult 25-mile sector of highway south of El Ocotal, it will be possible to motor without interruption from Alaska as far south as Costa Rica, where a gap obliges motorists to ship their cars by sea to Panama. Probably the most difficult link remaining to be constructed is the sector south of Panama City through the dense Darien jungle to a point south of the Colombian border. In South America, the route of the Pan American to Rio de Janeiro has only one remaining gap—the unfinished sector in southern Ecuador to the Peruvian border.

The forthcoming automobile race is limited to five-passenger, closed-body standard cars. An entry fee of 2500 pesos ($289 U. S.) includes insurance and 80-octane Super-Mexolina gasoline, which all cars must use. The entry deadline is midnight of April 5.

To be eligible for the three major prizes of 150,000, 100,000 and 50,000 pesos, an average speed of at least 50 miles an hour must be maintained by the contestants on each of the eight legs of the race. There are also 30,000 pesos in 24 prizes to be divided among the first three cars in each leg.

Inquiries and correspondence should be addressed to Sr. Guillermo Hawley, Director of Foreign Public Relations, Carrera Panamericana Mexico, Automotriz, Cornejo, Reforma and Versalles, Mexico, D. F.

LaGuardia Sailing Hour Advanced

A new sailing hour for the SS LaGuardia is announced by American Export Lines.

Beginning with the Passover sailing on March 27, the 18,000-ton liner will sail at 5 p. m. from Pier 84 North River, New York, for Gibraltar, Palmero, Naples, Piraeus and Haifa. Heretofore departure hour has been 10 p. m.

The time was advanced to permit a noon instead of a 4 p. m. arrival in Palmero. The remainder of the LaGuardia's schedule remains unchanged.

Ghost Town Portsmouth

Portsmouth on the Outer Banks of North Carolina, has more buildings than people. Once a thriving town of 1000, and North Carolina's first port of entry, Portmouth's population is now 18. Fishing and hunting are its industries.

Color TV's Really Been Here Some Time

they got over their camera fright," she says. It's the ones who are noted for their wit who are especially difficult, she finds. Probably afraid to open their mouths unless they have a pearl ready to drop.

Easy to Be With

MOST directors who have worked with her on TV insists she's easy to get along with, although she does so many special TV shows besides her own show that she's very busy. But Miss Emerson claims she can be "very crisp" with people when she thinks they aren't doing their part of the job.

Miss Emerson frequently takes the audience into her confidence. When there was concern in the TV industry over bare shoulders, Miss Emerson, who customarily wears dresses with some kind of strap but which shows—adequately—the creamy shoulders for which she is justly known, asked her audience what to do. Letters poured in. Ninety-five percent voted for the creamy shoulders. (She's just been named best dressed woman on TV, too.)

When she had her ears pierced, she told the audience. (Last Thursday a woman stopped her in front of the Gayety, asked her how her ears were. This is a common occurrence, Miss Emerson finds. In all the years she's been gracing the amusement pages of the papers as a result of her movie work, and page 1 as a result of being the wife of Eliott Roosevelt, she's never been recognized the way she has since she's been on TV. "The impact of television is terrific," she says).

Next move for Miss Emerson on TV, if she can convince some network, is a news commentary program slanted at women. "Tell them what the activities of the gas lobby in Washington mean to them at home," she explains. She thinks women are a terrific force, but she refuses to appeal to them as women. Just as "thinking people." No wonder the women don't resent Miss Emerson, no matter how much their husbands drool over the TV set.

Since 1940

IN A WAY, the color television situation has been under consideration since 1940 when Dr. Peter C. Goldmark of CBS sent the color disk spinning on the first practical color TV set.

The problem of color has come up periodically ever since, attended by a great deal of uproar about which of the color TV systems is best — there are three basic kinds—and which one will fit most easily into the present black-and-white setup.

Last week the Federal Communications Commission again resumed hearings, after a two-week recess, and the three contenders moiled in the turmoil.

This week, when RCA brought its anxiously awaited multi-color single tube receiver to town, the color TV situation got a wiggle on. (No pun intended; I haven't seen the tube in action.) Shown unofficially to the Commissioners late this week, the tube will probably be shown to the press next week and to the FCC officially soon thereafter.

The arrival of this color tube makes a BIG difference in the color hearings. Sight unseen it's been held up as the thing that's going to simplify the whole color receiver question. It would eliminate the necessity for a color disc in sets operated under the CBS system, it would cut down the problem of getting a clear picture for sets operating under the CTI system, and would eliminate much of the bulk and some of the expense of sets operating under the RCA system.

Color Story

CBS declines to turn its back on the color wheel set since they've yet to find anything wrong with it—price considered —except that the name "mechanical" seems to give some people the jimpams, and the fact that it limits the size of the screen you can use it on, but even CBS is looking forward to the RCA tube.

CBS' vice president in charge of television, the impeccable Adrian Murphy, even willingly admitted to a mistake he hadn't made in testimony before the FCC, lest there be any doubts. He had said CBS was looking forward to the tube with "anxiety"—clearly meaning the word in the last named dictionary sense, "solicitous desire"—but was happy to "correct" his choice of terms, call it anticipation, when a little titter arose in the hearing room.

But the fact that any of the three systems can use the new tube doesn't mean that the systems can be combined. It means only that a piece of equipment can be substituted for another piece of equipment in any of the three systems.

I decline to stick my nose into such dangerous things as vestigial sideband filters, crispening circuits, foot lamberts of light, the fact that K equals 12, shown as point D in figure 2. But I must let out a howl about some of the nonsense that is being circulated about this simple matter.

Let's start with the fact that a very prominent gentleman, a Senator in fact, has suggested that the best features of all three systems be combined in a composite system. "I know I'm talking about converting camels, oxen and horses into draft animals, and maybe adding elephants," he acknowledged. And as we all discovered in the second grade this isn't considered possible.

The fact of the matter is—and there is scarcely a handful of people who bear it in mind although many people know it—the three systems are basically contradictory. The simple elements of the system are the sequences in which the lines of the picture are sent. CBS sends an entire picture in one color, then an entire picture in another color and then an entire picture in a third color. (Actually they send half a picture at a time, but there's no need to get into that.) The colors are superimposed on one another so rapidly that the eye sees only a true color picture, with the exception, occasionally, of a fast moving white object in which the eye can detect "color breakup."

This system is called a field sequential system in acknowledgement of the fact that it covers a "field" at a time.

The Color Television, Inc., system sends impulses a line at a time. All three colors eventually cover each single line, producing normal color. This is called a line sequential system.

The RCA system sends its colors in millions of little color dots, making color switches at the rate of 10,800,000 a second, in what is called—you guessed it—the dot sequential system.

If you can combine these divergent systems, I'd like to hear how. The FCC would like to hear how, too. When people speak of combining the systems they evidently mean combining some of the refinements and methods of transmitting the systems. But combine the systems themselves? I won't say never, but I will say it doesn't figure from where I stand.

Somebody Blew the Whistle on Godfrey

By John Crosby

FOR THE first time since his spectacular rise to an income rivalling that of the Aga Khan—the Aga, as everyone knows, is second only to Bob Hope—Arthur Godfrey last week ran into stormy weather. The Peck's Bad Boy of radio and television has been in and out of trouble for years. This time they blew the whistle on him.

On March 14, Wayne Coy, chairman of the Federal Communications Commission, delivered a speech in Oklahoma City in which he said, among other things: "When a comedian gets so big that his network can no longer handle him, then we have a case of the tail wagging the dog. The boy who used to express himself with chalk on a wall is now provided with a television screen. The world has moved from the horse and buggy days to the electronic age but this type of comedian is still peddling livery stable humor."

This sounded suspiciously as if it were directed straight at Arthur Godfrey, whose six million-dollars worth of billing represented almost exactly the margin between profit and loss last year for the Columbia Broadcasting System. For one thing, Arthur has a notorious aversion to any sort of restraints imposed by either the advertisers or the network. For another, he has a great fondness for Rabelaisian humor, not all of it of the highest quality.

The Next Day

SO THE day after the Coy speech, Godfrey wound up his "Arthur Godfrey And His Friends" television program with a bit of business which sounded as if it were aimed straight back at Wayne Coy. Godfrey and his guests, Jack Carson and Morton Downey, were dressed as white wings and were wielding that symbol of the streetcleaner's trade, the pushbroom. "Well," remarked Godfrey, "we've dished a lot of it out. Lets clean some of it up."

You can't get much closer to the livery stable than that. The remark was ad libbed. It popped into Godfrey's head and right out his mouth without prior editing and without malice toward Coy. Still, right on the heels of the Coy speech, it was a little too much for the FCC. The commission made the strongest possible objections to CBS and the complaint went right straight to the top of the network. One CBS television affiliate threatened to drop the Godfrey show if the network couldn't discipline its Number One attraction. Even Godfrey was a trifle abashed and he's a hard man to abash.

In the Middle

WELL, it's a topic I've strained to avoid for some time. I hate to align myself with the forces of prudishness. At the same same time, I can't quite see myself coming out four-square for scatology. It puts a man in the middle. What Coy refers to as "livery stable humor" has been strongly intrenched in American folklore for some time. Does anyone remember "The Specialist" by the late Chic Sale, a learned disquisition on the construction of outhouses, which swept the country to a tune of one million copies in 1930? Everyone found it uproariously funny. There was quite a lot of livery stable humor in "Kitty Foyle," another enormously popular book of the thirties.

Just the same, radio and television which come straight into the livingroom, have always occupied a unique position, rather different from that of books, and Godfrey has often tottered precariously on the borders of good taste, not always falling on the right side. He is an impetuous man, given to uttering whatever occurs to him. That is part of his charm. It also has its drawbacks.

Godfrey can give the most astonishing meanings to entirely innocent statements simply by an inflection or the elevation of an eyebrow.

No Censor

AS COY pointed out in his Oklahoma City speech, the commission has no powers of censorship except in the case of "obscene, indecent or profane language" ($10,000 fine or two years in jail). However, he pointed out that poor taste would ultimately lead to "comstockery and all its attendant evils." He added, "I think it is far better for the radio station licensees and the networks to clean house before public opinion demands the more drastic remedy of governmental action."

And that is a threat that everyone concerned with the welfare of either radio or television ought to be seriously worried about. If we ever get a Government censor, there'll be nothing at all on the air except symphony music by American composers who have been cleared by the FBI.

Pipe down a little, Arthur.

Count the Welts, Never Mind the Bees

By Aubrey Graves

AND NOW, courtesy of Fred Fadely, our mail carrier, comes a 334-item questionnaire to complicate further the processes of life on our Bit o' Heaven in Fairfax. Dr. Roy V. Peel, the Census Boss, wants to know how many bees we've got. And "46 Stat. 21; 13 USC 201-218," he admonishes, "requires the filing of a report."

Concerning goats, machinery, silos and cowpeas, and all the other 333 questions, I stand ready, as a guv'mint-fearing citizen, to dish up the answers. But about those bees, Doctor, you've gotta be reasonable!

The ideological differences between me and those hellions of the hives are colossal and insurmountable. The formic acid they've transfused into my veins over the past 12 months has been enough, if suffered all at one time, to paralyze an elephant.

You want to know about bee stings, you don't waste time researching in the Agriculture Department laboratories, you come to me. The stinger, I have good reason to know, is located at the south end of a northbound bee's abdomen. It's one third as long as its entire body.

The queen has a smooth curved stinger without any barbs. She can use it repeatedly, without harm to herself. But she stings only to kill rival queens. Male bees, or drones, have no stingers. So don't worry about any of these.

The monster you want to avoid is the worker. The worker is an undeveloped female bee, whose life is devoid of romantic moments. Maybe that's why she's so mean. Her weapon is straight and has barbs at the end. When the worker stings, she tears away part of her abdomen and dies. And so, almost, do you. Don't try to squeeze those barbs out; scrape 'em off with a knife. Then run for the ammonia bottle.

The Novice countryman can't trust anybody's literature, it seems. "Get a couple of honeybee hives right away," the Farmer's Guide insisted. "Their pollination value is 50 times as important as all the honey they make." So the apiarist came to our place, left a couple of colonies, and took away 28 bucks.

The tractor headed for the rutabagas, its driver for the watering trough

"To have and to hold and to peaceably enjoy" was the assurance in the deed that came with our acres. Maybe those bees didn't savvy that legalistic language. At any rate, sovereignty passed out of our hands immediately, the word "landowner" became a hollow mockery, and last summer the pollinators all but ran me off the place.

Let me venture past a hive after milking and I'd reach the house with more imbedded stingers than drops of butterfat.

Let me climb up to snatch a couple of Jonathons and I'd quickly regret it. The thicket in the upper reaches of an apple tree is no place for a fast take-off.

Tractor Too Slow

THE FINAL straw came one day while I was mowing the high grass around the apiary. Helmet, veil and gloves foiled 'em at first, but on the second round the determined devils found the flapping bottoms of my pants.

None of the cub tractor's four speeds proving fast enough, we parted company. My objective was the corn crib. I still had too many companions, so it had to be the watering trough.

The tractor, on its own, proceeded to cut some fancy curlicues, bounded across the pasture, crashed through the fence and was last seen mowing through Mr. Reidy's rutabaga patch. (Mr. R. recently consented to take our hives as liquidated damages and let us have our tractor back.)

Onion juice and baking soda brought reasonable relief to a smarting backside. But that decisive rout apparently wasn't enough. One of the avengers laid in wait inside those pants and two days later drove his point home with a vengeance!

Net Loss—$29.75

WHEN TIME came to take the honey, our neighbor, Mr. Kidwell, volunteered. With face uncovered and sleeves rolled up, he walked right out there, without the militia, lifted the super, removed the comb, and not one sting did he get. The bees swarmed up and down his arms and across his neck in loving admiration while we watched apprehensively from the safe side of the kitchen windowpane.

The cache of honey was worth about $2, our grocer estimated. Counting our original investment and Mr. Kidwell's $3 fee, that left us $29 to the bad. Twenty-nine dollars and 75 cents, to be exact, because one of the hives later swarmed and took up new residence in a beer box on which I had a deposit of six-bits.

The workers, the queens and the drones at the moment are in winter quarters, but they'll be out again with drawn sabers any day now. The Department of Commerce can threaten me with "46 Stat. 21; 13 USC 201-218" all it pleases. If Dr. Peel is that curious, he can come out with his smoke pots and count 'em himself. Mrs. Graves, for sure, raised some remarkable children, but there's not a bee counter in the bunch.

Coat Hanger Coating

Even the finish on a wooden coat hanger must be tailored to its purpose. It must be smooth—so as to avoid catching and tearing the threads of a garment. It must also have a pleasing color and a glossy surface.

Lemon Tree in North

Chillicothe, Ill. (AP).—The Fred Gauwitz family has been picking lemons off the same lemon tree for 23 years. They tote the tree and the tub it's rooted in down to the basement each November and up to the yard each May.

New Roses on Display

FASHION, the outstanding rose you have been reading about, is on display for the first time at the twenty-sixth National Flower Show, now open and continuing through March 29 at the Armory.

This rose, the only bloom ever to win five top awards here and abroad, is a Floribunda. Its color, entirely new to the rose world, is luminous coral overlaid with gold. Neiman-Marcus of Dallas, Tex., used the hue as the inspiring theme for its spring and summer fashions. It is displayed in charming arrangements for the house and outside.

Displayed in the rose garden of more than 600 plants by Jackson and Perkins, introducers of Fashion is still another rose seen for the first time, a beautifully formed yellow hybrid tea named Golden Scepter.

Also in the rose garden, designed by L. A., Armand Tibbitts of Greenwich, Conn., is an informal garden on two levels inclosed by an evergreen hedge and set off by a background of dignified holly trees. Beautiful red New Yorker; All-America winner Diamond Jubilee, and other outstanding hybrid teas, plus a display of Floribunds, including the Lavender Pinocchio, are there.

These popular varieties will be shown each day of the show by Mrs. Vincent Porter Whitsitt, lecturer, teacher and judge of flower arrangements, of Scarsdale, N. Y.

Garden Shows a Boon To Good Fellowship

By Katherine Barrett Pozer

THE good fellowship of gardening is one of its most pleasant features. It continues all the way from "over the back fence" chats and plant exchanges, up through the gardening groups to the highly technical discussions of the horticultural societies.

Some of our most valued historical horticultural information is found in the correspondance between botanists and horticulturists of early days. The practice of writing to others who are interested in the same type of floriculture or horticulture is still one of the most valuable features of better plant production. Such correspondance is encouraged by many of the national horticultural societies who have organized series of "round robin" letters for interchange of flower growing experiments.

The large flower shows give many of these enthusiasts the opportunity to meet their correspondants and follow through in person the discussions they have had through the mail.

Here the commercial growers meet with the amateurs on more or less equal footing, and the latter frequently find that many of these experts have their own personal likes and dislikes in the flower world which they want to talk about. For them it is not "talking shop"—gardening remains the gay adventure it should be and they have the deepest appreciation of the value of gardens in everyday lives. As one leading seedsman put it "Flowers are my business and hobby as well."

No Bored Visitors

ONE thing we like about flower shows is that there are never any bored visitors. Often in other types of exhibits one enthusiastic member of a family will drag in unwilling fellow members. But with flower shows every member can find an interest. Father may want to see the new garden tools and gadgets and the vegetable garden exhibits, while mother is interested in arrangements and garden flowers. Even the small children are charmed to find in the exquisite and perfect show gardens, some of the plants with which they are familiar at home.

Dowagers accompanied by their chauffeurs discuss with them the possibilities of finding more space for some of the new plant material on display, while the latter makes mental notes of things suitable to his own small garden.

Young couples carefully check over the miniature gardens set up by the garden clubs as they make hasty sketches which will fit in with their own gardening space and budget. All in all a large flower show is a happy occasion and one in which good fellowship and a spirit of real friendliness abounds.

Strength in Union

THE garden clubs are having a field day as they set up their exhibits and plan and bring in the arrangements made fresh each day. They are getting to know each other and the close contacts with other clubs at the show will prove of great value. Garden clubs are beginning once more to make the strength of their organizations felt in backing legislation they feel is needed to protect the beauty and resources of the country.

"Keep America Beautiful" was one of the first slogans adopted by the clubs and now that slogan has many companions such as "Keep America Green." The conservation of forests has been one of the leading interests of national and State organizations and nearly every garden club has its conservation chairman, whose work it is to educate both children and adults in the necessity of the protection of our forests, wildlife and wild flowers.

The laws passed in Maryland and Virginia and other States have done much to save the dogwood, holly, laurel, rhododendron, creeping pine and other woodland things which were on their way out along with the passenger pigeon and buffalo. The conservation exhibits at shows do much to bring these things to the attention of the general public.

Centers of Interest

FLOWERS still hold first place, and the shows bring such perfection onto being that few can resist the lure of a garden. The National Show now at the Armory (through March 29) with its beautiful exhibit of azaleas which are such popular flowers here, the vast planting of bulbs from the Netherlands and the roses growing happily in the Armory are centers of interest.

The lovely spring gardens planted by the local nurseries are proving treasure troves to both newscomer and old-timer. Here they can see at firsthand just what the nearby nurseries have to offer for spring garden and summer bloom.

Rightly called "Springboards to Summer," the large flower shows gather together material which it would take weeks and months of travel to see otherwise. They also bring together congenial souls and a gardening enthusiasm which pays off to both the individual and the country at large.

Start 'Em Indoors

Start annual vines, such as cypress vines, moonflower and heavenly blue morning glories indoors.

Transparent Protection

It Pays to Plant Fresh Seeds

By James H. Beattie

FORESIGHT must be used in obtaining seeds and plants for the garden. The size of the garden must be known before you can plan to obtain seeds and plants in proper quantities. After this is done no time should be lost in arranging for a supply of seeds and plants.

The cost of seed for a medium-sized garden is not great and it usually pays to obtain fresh seed each season. Supplies left over from the previous year may be used sometimes. Unless the left over seeds were fumigated before storage and kept in a dry, well-ventilated, rodent-proof place during the winter they'll probably be worthless.

If the seeds are quite dry and free from insect infestation and stored in tight containers placed in a cool place their viability is greatly lengthened.

High-grade seed of varieties that are known to be adapted to local Washington conditions is usually available at moderate cost from many dealers and it seldom pays to take chances with home-saved seed. Many of the vegetables cross-pollinate and the resulting seed is likely to produce plants of a nondescript nature.

Amounts Needed

A DETAILED garden plan showing the space to be devoted to each vegetable should be prepared before ordering seed or plants. This should provide for succession plantings of sweet corn, green beans and others planted at intervals to insure a constant supply.

The accompanying table, listing only a selected number of the more important vegetables, shows row widths, spacings of the plants in the rows and the quantity of seed or the number of plants required for one 50-foot row. Longest rows require proportionately larger quantities.

Best results are usually obtained by using only varieties that are known to be adapted to local conditions.

Starting Inside

EARLINESS, economy of garden space and the practical lengthening of the growing season result from setting plants instead of sowing directly in the garden. Without adopting this time-saving plan many of our best garden vegetables would be lost to us.

| Vegetable | Distance between rows, inches | Plants or hills, inch. | Seeds or plants needed |
|---|---|---|---|
| Asparagus | 30 | 18 | 35 plants |
| Beans, lima, bush | 28 | 4 | 6 oz. |
| Beans, lima, pole | 36 | 24 | 4 oz. |
| Beans, snap, bush | 28 | 3 | 6 oz. |

| Beets | 16 | 3 | ½ oz. |
| Cabbage | 30 | 18 | 1 packet |
| Carrots | 16 | 1½ | ¼ oz. |
| Corn, sweet | 36 | 12 | 2 oz. |
| Cucumbers | 72 | 72 | ¼ oz. |
| Eggplant | 36 | 30 | 20 plants |
| Kale | 24 | 10 | 1 packet |
| Lettuce, head | 16 | 12 | 50 plants |
| Lettuce, leaf | 16 | 6 | 1 packet |
| Onions, sets | 16 | 3 | 1 pint |

| Tomatoes, staked | 36 | 24 | 26 plants |
| Turnips | 16 | 3 | ¼ packet |

Starting plants in the home has many disadvantages, chiefly poor light and temperature conditions. It is quite possible to start the seedlings in a pan or box placed in a sunny window and transplant them when 10 days to two weeks old to an outdoor coldframe. The small-size electric-heated hotbed is ideal for starting plants for the home garden.

Purchased plants, whether shipped from the South or grown in local hotbeds and greenhouses, should be stocky, healthy, and of the desired varieties. Plants shipped long distances should be planted promptly after being received. Sometimes the ground has not been prepared or it is too wet and the plants may spoil before they can be handled. There is a lot to be said in favor of a plant that can be lifted from the seed-bed and moved to the garden with a good-sized mass of soil around the roots.

Booklet Gives 11 Rules for Gardening

THE DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE has put out a little helper called "growing vegetables in town and city."

The agriculture people, in their advice to the novice, set down a bunch of rules. They are mostly on the "don't" side.

1. Don't try to grow vegetables on a lot that is too poor to make a good growth of weeds or grass, or is made up of rubble or unweathered "subsoil fill." Or is contaminated with coal, chemical, or oil-product wastes. Or is so wet that it grows weeds common to marshy or poorly drained spots. Or is likely to be flooded by stream overflow. Or is located so that it received much storm drainage or surface water from above. Or is shaded by large trees more than a few hours a day.

2. Don't spade, plow, or cultivate soil that is too wet.

3. Don't use too much lime.

4. Don't run the rows up and down a slope.

5. Don't plant seeds, roots, or tubers too deeply.

6. Don't plant seeds too thickly and don't fail to thin out plants to the proper distance.

7. Don't let the fertilizer come in contact with the seeds or plants.

8. When you hoe, don't dig deep enough to injure the shallow roots of the vegetables.

9. Don't let the weeds get out of hand.

10. If the rains don't come—don't sprinkle. Give the plants a good dousing once a week.

11. Don't let the vegetables become too old before harvesting them.

And if you are worried about cutworms—don't.

The Department of Agriculture has another little leaflet out on that subject. The Government says it is "easy to get rid" of cutworms. All you have to do is use a poisoned-bran bait.

Get a peck of dry bran, add one-fourth pound of white arsenic, paris green or sodium fluosillicate, and three or four quarts of water. Mix the poison with the bran. Caution—add only enough liquid to make a crumbly mass. Then sow the bait about the base of the plant—late in the evening.

What kind of garden do you fancy?

You Can Fix That Paint Brush Easily

DO YOU have a paint brush which seems ready for the trash can because it's gummed up with hardened paint? You can resurrect that old brush with just a little effort. Soak it a day or so in a liquid brush cleaner, working the bristle occasionally to loosen the hard paint. Scrape as much of the paint out as possible and soak the brush in hot, soapy water. Then, using soap powder, scrub the brush on a washboard. Rinse all the soap and paint out, let it dry, and the brush is ready to go again.

It pays to keep paint brushes in good condition from the time you buy them. And it pays doubly, to buy high quality brushes. A cheap brush will shed its bristle on the coated surface and is liable to drip and spatter the paint.

Shake 'Em Out

THE NEW nylon bristle brushes need no more preliminary treatment than shaking out loose bristle. Animal bristle brushes should also have the stragglers shaken out by rolling the handle of the brush between the palms of the hands. The latter type of brush should then be suspended in linseed oil for at least 12 hours before use. Don't let the bristle ends rest on the bottom of the container. When you're ready to use the brush, lay it on its side and press out the oil with a wooden strip, working downward from the ferrule to the tip.

Always clean a brush thoroughly when you have completed a job. Use the proper thinner for the product you've painted with. For brushes dipped in oil paint, enamel, or varnish, use turpentine followed by naptha or mineral spirits; for shellac or alcohol stain, use alcohol; and for lacquer brushes, lacquer thinner.

Soak the brush and work out the material against the side of the container. Then, squeeze the brush from ferrule to tip to press out more of the paint. Do this several times, rinsing the brush in fresh thinner each time. A wire brush is helpful in removing very hard paint accumulations.

Wash It Well

BEFORE putting the brush away, wash it in warm soapy water, rinse it thoroughly, whirl it dry inside a container and comb the bristle. When it is completely dry, wrap the bristle in heavy paper and store the brush in a cool, dry place. A few naphthalene crystals added before wrapping will keep the moths from nibbling at the bristle.

A clean, high quality brush is not only necessary for smooth, uniform painting, but it's a thrift measure as well.

Paint That Nicked Ice Box

A NEW enamel, "Whiter White," brushed on by even an amateur, will give that wear-worsened old refrigerator a new-looking surface. It will cover scratches, nicks and worn spots with one application, the manufacturer claims, and will leave the resulting surface gleaming and smooth, acid-resistant and easy to clean.

First, go over the surface with a fine sandpaper, using light up-and-down strokes. This is to form a base for the enamel to adhere to, rather than to remove the old coating.

The enamel will become adhesive in about 20 minutes.

Forest Floor Long a' Building

Berkeley, Calif. (AP). — Nature takes a long time to make the floor of a forest. The amount of floor different forests lay down has been measured by Stanley P. Gessel, a graduate student at the University of California College of Agriculture.

Oak leaves, he finds, decompose at a rate of 6 to 12 percent a year and take 25 to 50 years to form a floor. Pine needles are much slower, and may take from 100 to 300 years to cover the ground enough to protect it. In hot and humid areas the rate of decomposition is much faster—up to 60 percent.

Bare Root and Pot Grown Rose Bushes
Nearly all Rosebushes for garden planting are grown by grafting buds of the desired varieties on multiflora root stock. This budding takes place in the summer. Fifteen months later, in November, after curing by Frost, the roses are dug. At that time we sell bare root stock for immediate planting.
All our roses for Spring planting are then pruned, sprayed and potted in deep, wide rose pots in prepared soil. In the Spring, these potted roses have developed FEEDER ROOTS within the firm ball of earth, making transplanting easy and providing an established, active plant. Our free calendar guide, available at our shops, gives pruning, feeding and spraying advice for Roses and many other varieties of your favorite plants.

For Real Tomatoes, Plant Seed

By Alfred Putz

FOR ONLY a dozen or so tomato plants there is little incentive to start them from seed; but where the garden space calls for more, it pays to grow one's own. It isn't so much the cost of the plants as the fact that you can make your selection from a far greater number of varieties.

While a single packet of a standard variety should give at least 100 strong plants, it is better to sow an early and a main-crop variety.

Although some of the older varieties like Beefsteak (also called Crimson Cushion) and Stone still have a strong following, it is the more recent developments that include the highest yielders with the most attractive fruits. Many of the newcomers also are disease-resistant and their flavor beats that of any of the old-timers.

Local conditions enter into the choice, but one can hardly go wrong by selecting such famous varieties as Rutgers (75 days), Marglobe (73 days), Stokesdale (70 days), Valiant (65 days), Pan-America (65 days) and Pritchard (70 days)—the days are the length of time required for maturity after plants are set out. There also are many gardeners who are solidly sold on the value of the new hybrid tomatoes. If it is a good pink-fruited sort you are looking for, the old Ponderosa (83 days) still is a leader. Jubilee (75 days) is by far the best of the yellow or orange ones.

No Hurry in Sowing

DO NOT be in a hurry starting the seed. Late March or early April is early enough in this section unless a greenhouse is available so that they can be kept cool. Only six to eight weeks are required to grow plants of proper size for planting, which in this section is soon after the middle of May. There is nothing gained by setting them out too early, even where they can be protected against late frost.

Tomato seed may be started in pure sand, pulverized or finely shredded sphagnum moss or in a mixture of half coarse sand and half good garden soil.

The container need not be more than 2 inches deep. It must have good drainage. Settle the sand or soil mixture, if that is what was used, by knocking against a solid table top; level the surface with the edge of a large ladle and compact with a smooth board.

Sow thinly and evenly, in rows if you prefer, and barely cover from view with the same material used for filling the container.

Eggplant and tomato seeds should be started under protection and plants set in the garden when safe from frost

Give a thorough watering and cover with a pane of glass and a piece of brown paper on top of that to exclude strong light. A sunny window is a good place for the seedpan or box so that the temperature will be between 70 and 80 degrees during the day and around 60 degrees at night.

How to Water

KEEP moderately moist until the seeds are up. When lifting the glass for watering take care that the cold drops of water on its underside do not fall on the soil. Just as soon as the seeds have sprouted, remove the paper and prop up the glass on one side with a pencil or stick to admit a little air but during the daytime only. After a few days remove the glass. Two or three weeks after sowing, the seedlings should be large enough to transplant into shallow boxes (growers call them flats) filled with sandy soil. Here they should stand not less than two inches apart.

Let the soil become reasonably dry between waterings. To provide more light tack a large piece of white cardboard or a sheet of tinfoil to the room side of the container to reflect some of the incoming light.

Just as soon as the sash-covered coldframe provides full protection against frost, set the flats in the frame or, better still, transplant to the frame to stand 4 inches apart each way. Or you could transplant them to 3- or 4-inch pots, sunk rim-deep into the soil of the frame. On balmy days ventilate from 10 in the morning until 4 in the afternoon by raising the sash 4 inches on the side opposite the wind.

Need Ample Light

IF YOU have no coldframe, select the brightest window space you can find for the flat. If not too much trouble, put it outdoors during balmy days but bring in again before the sun nears the horizon. Lack of light is what makes them weak and spindly.

Never pull the plants from the flats for transplanting. You will lose too many of the root tips which are the most important part of the young root system. The right way for lifting is to water an hour before they are needed; later run a knife through the soil to block off the plants and lift carefully with a trowel.

With another trowel open the planting hole large enough to take the soil ball and gently slide the plant into position. Next pour a cupful of starter solution over the roots and without delay draw enough dry soil into the hole to level the surface. Do not press down on the soil as you would if no starter solution were used.

To make a starter solution take one level cupful of a 4-12-4 or 5-10-5 plant food to 12 quarts of water. Stir well and it is ready for use.

Cutworms often take a serious toll, so it pays to provide a stiff paper collar around each plant.

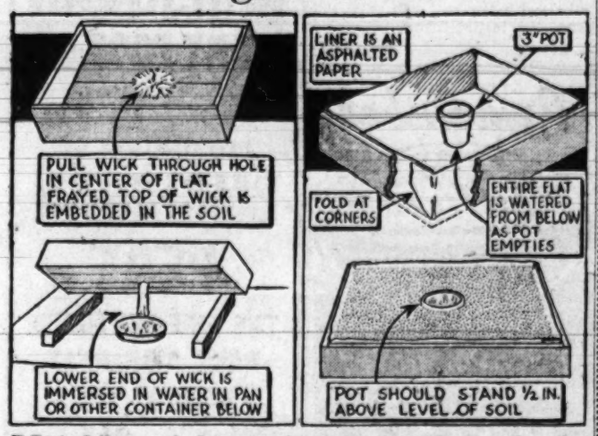
Automatic Watering Keeps Soil Just Right in Seed Box



Most failures of flower and vegetable seeds to grow are probably due to either a lack or an excess of moisture. This is true not only indoors but in the outdoor garden as well. Since watering indoors depends upon a human agency, failures here are more frequent, and have been seriously studied by the scientists.

If the soil gets too dry, the tiny seedlings with their shallow roots may perish in an hour. If kept too wet, fungi may develop, resulting in the fatal disease called "damping off." To keep the moisture just right was formerly a matter of experienced judgment, and required a constant watch on the seed flat, difficult for the amateur.

But science has found two methods which may be followed both better than the old fashioned way of spraying on water from above, whenever in the judgment of the gardener watering was required. These methods are illustrated. On the left is the wick method; on the right, subirrigation.

Many believe the best method of watering seed flats in the home is the wick method. This consists of using a burlap wick or one of glass, inserting one wick in the center of the flat spreading it over about three inches in diameter on the bottom of the flat inside and letting the wick hang in the water. The water then moves up to the soil by capillarity and keeps the flat at a constant uniform moisture content.

In the subirrigation system a waterproof liner is used to hold water until it rises through the soil above.

Both the wick and the flat-insert method of watering plants are satisfactory out-of-doors, both are superior to the ordinary surface-watering method since they do not splash the seeds around and spread disease producing organisms. There is very little difference in the ease of using either of these methods.

If a pan sufficiently large is used beneath the flat, in using the wick method, sufficient water for several days may be provided, and it will rise only as fast as needed, enabling plants to be left unattended for a day or two, when necessary. With either method there is no danger of tiny seedlings being washed out of the soil when water is applied.

Old Lawns Become New Lawns When You REJUVENATE Them With

Lawn Bilder

the long lasting Lawn Food containing 2,4-D Weed Killer

IN THE GREEN AND YELLOW STRIPED BAG

IMPROVES LAWNS 3 WAYS

Give your lawn the right start this spring for a thick, deep-rooted, weed-free turf, with an application of LAWN BILDER—the lawn food that improves lawns three ways in one operation: (1) promotes luxuriant growth of grass; (2) kills obnoxious weeds; (3) improves the soil by adding humus.

"DOUBLE ACTION" NITROGEN

Lawn Bilder contains "double action" nitrogen—a quick acting supply for a fast start—a slower acting supply from the soybean meal base for continued feeding. This long-lasting factor is especially valuable because it feeds the grass, maintaining better growth over a longer period.

KILLS BROAD-LEAF WEEDS

There's just the right amount of 2,4-D Weed Killer in Lawn Bilder to free your lawn from dandelions, plantains, buckhorn and other common broad-leaf weeds without injuring grass plants. (Lawn Bilder is not recommended on creeping bent nor on newly seeded areas, as 2,4-D may prove harmful to those grasses).

IMPROVES THE SOIL

The base of Lawn Bilder is soybean meal which, in addition to its feeding values, is also especially valuable because it holds moisture and adds humus to the soil.

Twenty-five pounds of Lawn Bilder is sufficient for 2500 square feet of lawn. Lawn Bilder does not have the obnoxious odor of most fertilizers. You'll like its "no-burn" tendency—and you'll enjoy the luxuriant, weed-free lawn that Lawn Bilder develops for you.

If Mud Makes Pie, It Shows Soil Is Too Wet for Spading

When soil crumbles easily in the hand, it's time to plow

PLOWING on the farm and spading in the garden are ancient practices which have been under attack in recent years but are still regarded by most tillers of the soil as the best way to prepare for planting.

Most amateur gardeners have had plenty experience in sowing without spading, in the flower borders for example. Where perennial plants are established, seeds for annual flowers must be sown with a trowel rather than a spade, to avoid disturbing neighboring roots. But the practice is one of necessity rather than choice.

There is rare pleasure in turning over garden soil, if you take it easy, and wait until the ground is in the right condition to be turned. Never work soil which is too wet; and if the soil is heavy, don't wait until it has become too dry. There is a point between extremes even when heavy clay can easily be lifted, and will crumble under a blow from the spade.

To tell this point, mold a ball of earth in your hand, and pat it to make a mud pie. If the pie holds together, the soil is too wet to spade. If it crumbles, go ahead.

Set a definite task for your first day's work, say a strip six feet wide, running the shortest dimension of the garden. At one end dig a ditch, say one foot wide and the depth of the spade, removing all soil from it. Pile this soil near the opposite end of the strp.

Now begin to spade with the blade not parallel to the trench, but at right angles to it. This enables you to lift the soil more easily, and deposit it in the trench. Drive the spade down, not on a slant, but perpendicularly to its full depth. Take a small slice of the soil so your back is not strained. Lift it up, turn the spade over, so that the top soil falls underneath and bottom soil on top. In filling the first trench, you have opened a second.

To spade under manure, spread it evenly over the area, except for the top of your initial trench. When this first trench has been dug, clean the manure from the top of the next trench and throw it into the bottom of the first; then proceed with your spading, piling the soil on top of the manure.

When you have finished your day's quota, you will have an empty trench, which should be filled with the soil you removed from the initial trench.

Sprouts Need Help to Find Sun

MANY hazards lie in the path of a seed sown in the garden. Its life may be destroyed before its sprout emerges from the soil by drowning, when water stands too long in the spot where it was sown; or by disease, especially in cold damp weather, which encourages the growth of moulds and fungi while delaying germination.

Disinfectants are obtainable for treating seeds to protect them from disease.

But one of the greatest hazards is due to the forming of a soil crust above the seeds, which they cannot penetrate.

It is a good plan to save your best loose, sandy loam to use in covering seed. Mix with equal amounts of sand and peat moss. Then after the seed is sown, cover with this special soil, which will not form a crust and will allow for both water and air to penetrate for the benefit of your seedlings.

This treatment is especially important in hot weather, when most soil is liable to bake into a hard crust.

Soil must be firmed above the seeds, to form close contact, and prevent air spaces from separating the soil and seed. This is especially important with beet and Swiss chard seeds, and others of large and irregular shape. But firming does not mean pounding. Press down with the hoe blade, or use the side of a rake; and afterward draw the rake lightly over the row to break up the crust and prevent baking.

A heavy rain falling soon after seed is sown may pack the soil too hard, especially if it is followed by sunshine. Until the seed has sprouted the soil surface over it should be moist and loose.

When the ground dries out excessively in the spring it will pay to sprinkle the rows in which seed have been sown to prevent them lying dormant for lack of moisture.

Great Bank Robbery

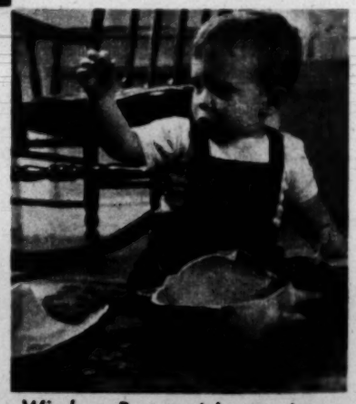
Temptation: Young Roger Pellegrini stares raptly at piggy bank he was told never to play with.

Transgression: Roger takes pig.

Enjoyment: Roger rattles coins.

Dismay: Roger drops the pig.



Wisdom: Roger picks up pieces.

High finance, junior grade: A small boy and a piggy bank show what can happen when curiosity wins.

To 18-MONTH-OLD Roger Pellegrini of New York City, the Great Bank Robbery will always be the time he finally got his hands on his bright, fragile Mexican pottery piggy bank.

Bought for Roger at his birth, it stood enticingly on a table. Roger was told to put pennies in it. Roger was told not to play with it. Roger began to want it more every day.

Anticipating the inevitable, Roger's father, Bruno, one day said, "All right, Roger!" got a camera-eye report of a child learning about life. Roger got $7. The bright pig was gone.

PEBBLE BEACH: To Bing Crosby, it's home . . .

The place I like best...

His favorite place? PARADE asked the movies' Bing Crosby, got this enthusiastic reply in the next mail:

FOR A MAN who has spent most of his life in the hustle and bustle of show business, I happen to be extraordinarily fond of peace and seclusion. Whenever I can get away from it all, I'm a happy guy. That's why I own a ranch up near Elko, Nevada, and lazily shift myself there for several weeks every summer.

But alas, I must earn a living and feed a quartet of offspring appetites – all hearty ones. That means I must find my seclusion nearer to Hollywood and my alma mater, Paramount. So I have found my favorite spot near enough and yet far from movietown, about 300 miles north of it. The place is Pebble Beach, 100 miles south of San Francisco.

Up there, I built our new home two years ago and I live there every hour I'm not acting, cutting records or disporting on radio.

I can drive from the studio to my front door in seven hours. The house is in a wooded area of cone pines and cypress trees overlooking the blue Pacific and affords a view to challenge the most exacting of tastes. I'm not a seaman. I own no boats. I seldom sail. But I love that expansive panorama of the bluest, calmest ocean in the world.

Some rumor-mongers have hinted that I am fond of golf. Fond? I'm an addict. Take my front lawn, for example. It's the twelfth green of the Pebble Beach course. And by a strange coincidence there are two other courses nearby: Monterey and Cypress Point!

Now you can probably understand why I nominate for my number one favorite bit of heaven on earth – home on the Pacific's shore at Pebble Beach.

Is this really a ghost?

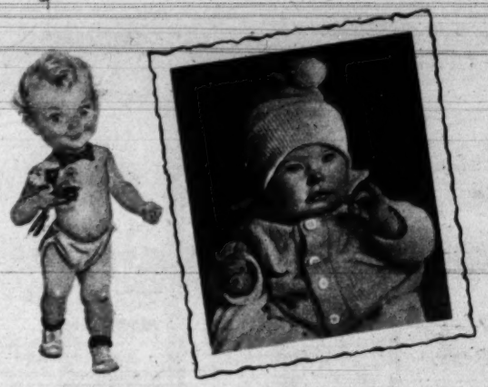
JUST TAKE THE WORD of photographer Oscar Marcus: this is the picture of a woman. Better yet, hear him tell it. "I was standing outside a market place in the hot sun of a Tripoli morning," says Marcus, "looking for something to train my camera on. Then I saw her, just as you do here. From the rear she looked like nothing more than a walking sheet. Only her purchases, the rolled mat and the basket of bread and fruit from the market broke the soft, shapeless profile. She was walking away from me as I snapped the shutter, and in a minute she had disappeared. I never saw her again."



Cute little Helene Young, at 6 months, never dreamed her baby picture would be published here 25 years later. She and her 2 husky brothers were all KARO-fed in infancy... and on thru childhood. Even today, Helene and her family enjoy KARO every day... she admits her favorite breakfast is French Toast and KARO.

"Then... Now... and ALWAYS...

Karo...a great syrup ...right thru life!"

Millions of active people of all ages enjoy KARO every day... and thrive on its quick food energy.

This delicious syrup is America's favorite spread for pancakes, waffles, biscuits... it is wonderful for baking and cooking... dandy for home candy making ... for delicious sauces and frostings... ideal for canning prize-winning fruits.

Yes... right thru life... KARO Syrup is an outstanding energy food rich in dextrose, food-energy sugar.

THERE ARE 3 KINDS OF KARO:

- Red Label KARO is crystal clear (LIGHT)... mild, sweet, delicate!
- Blue Label KARO (DARK)... rich, zesty, satisfying!
- Green Label KARO (MAPLE-Y)... with tangy flavor!

Memory at work: Dr. Bruno Furst can take one glance at 48 cards on wall behind him, then call out description and number, in or out of sequence.

You Can learn to Remember

By EDWARD J. NICKEL

All you have to do is learn to associate new facts with old, says memory expert Dr. Bruno Furst . . .

HAVE YOU TRIED to polish up your memory lately? Given it a workout, stretched its muscles, tried to make it really WORK for you?

Chances are, you haven't. Like most Americans you probably take your memory for granted—good or bad. You shrug off its shortcomings without a twinge of conscience. "I have a poor memory for faces," you explain. Or, "I just can't seem to remember telephone numbers."

Memory, you've long assumed, is something you're born with—or without—and that's that! You can't improve it.

But right there, according to a New York City psychologist, is where you're wrong. Very wrong!

For something can be done about your memory. It can be improved. And what's more, you can improve it yourself.

The authority is Dr. Bruno Furst, 59-year-old expert on hypnotism, telepathy, chess, bridge, and, above all, memory. For nearly a dozen years he has been crusading against American forgetfulness. His weapons: three widely read books, his School of Memory and Concentration (classes and correspondence courses) and 5,000 graduates, some of whom, out of enthusiasm and gratitude, have formed the "Furst Memory Club."

Memory Is Made, Not Born

Dr. Furst's thesis is that good memories are made, not born. "There is no 'good' or 'bad' memory," he insists. "Most memories are poor only because they operate below capacity."

Nor to him is the human mind merely a warehouse, capable of storing only so many items before some must be discarded to make room for more.

"The more you remember," he insists, "the easier it is to remember more."

GIRL STUDENT lectures 10 minutes then listens while 20 students fire questions. When all questions are in, she must remember each one and address her reply to the student who asked it.

MEMORY CODE: Students learn fixed numbers for weeks, months, years, can give correct day of week for any date, in the past or future.

Dr. Furst bases memory training on a principal theme: we learn and remember anything new only by associating it with something we already know.

The problem, then, is to connect new situations to be remembered with old ones already mastered–in other words, to associate new facts with familiar facts.

And this whole process of association can be speeded, according to Dr. Furst, through use of mechanical aids, or memory "crutches."

A Crutch for Memory

Don't be frightened by terms. Though you've probably never thought of them in this light, chances are that you've been using some memory "crutches" for years. "I before E, except after C . . ." or "Thirty days hath September . . ." are perfect examples. Artificial? Surely. But they help you remember facts.

The principal difference between a person with a trained memory and a person with an untrained memory is that the former knows WHAT crutches to use.

Let's look at some specific examples:

How to remember names?

Dr. Furst suggests six steps. First, get the name clearly. Second, repeat it immediately after the introduction.

Don't say, "How do you do?" but rather, "How do you do, MR. OTTENFIELD?"

Third, see whether the name has a meaning in itself. In other words try to associate it with something familiar. Is it the name of a city – Mr. Cleveland? Or maybe it's an occupation–Mr. Taylor.

These are easy, but if the name has no direct association you have to create one. This is the fourth step, and it's a matter of thinking of Mr. Buckman as buck, buckle or bucket; Mr. Bracken as bracket, brace or brakeman. The point is that when you think of the person you will think first of buck or bracket. This gives you the key to the name.

The fifth and sixth rules are easy: repeat the name several times and, finally, write it down, because the act of writing a name helps you to remember it.

With a little practice, Mr. Buckman, Mr. Bracken – or anyone else – can be tagged with the right name.

How to remember a face?

Remembering a name is pretty futile unless you can recognize the man. Again, Dr. Furst suggests six simple rules:

See The Whole Face

First, observe not just the face, but the whole head. Note its shape, the hair, eyes and forehead, nose, mouth and chin.

Don't just take a casual glance. Scan features closely. Look right at the man.

Next, classify the features in your own mental chart of faces which permits you to distinguish ordinary from unusual.

Look for outstanding features: a Roman nose, wide eyes or shade of hair.

Draw the face, not actually, but mentally. Do it several times. Then, still mentally, compare your imaginative drawing with the face itself. Finally, redraw the face until you know its peculiarities.

Meanwhile, if you've been mastering the person's name, you'll have his identity mastered–and permanently, too.

Does all this work? It does.

Using the same principles, Dr. Furst can recall and tell you the position of each headline, article, advertisement and picture in a copy of PARADE after a single, slow reading. But he doesn't recommend the concentrated process. "It's a stunt, really. And usually it's useless."

An unusual mind? "No," answers Dr. Furst. "Let's just call it a trained one."

MRS. FURST (standing) hears cards in three bridge hands called, can list cards in 4th hand.

CLASSIFICATION: You can't avoid it if you want to improve your memory . . .

BE discriminating when you want to remember, says Dr. Bruno Furst. You don't reach for your dessert while you're eating your steak. You finish the latter first. The same principle holds for remembering. Study these two examples. You'll see what he means:

A SIMPLE TEST

Study this picture carefully for one minute. Next, cover the page and write down as many of the objects as you remember in two minutes. Here's a helpful hint: when you finish, if score is perfect, you'll have 16 items.

TRY IT AGAIN

It's easier to remember the objects now. Why? Because they're classified logically according to use: reading, drinking, smoking, writing. Person with a trained memory always classifies when he wants to remember.

This Is The First Thing You Need For A Cold—To Feel Better, Fast!

THE COLD TREATMENT that is widely recommended today is aspirin and as much rest as possible because of all cold treatments, this is the simplest and most effective.

At the first sign of a cold—before you do anything else—you should take BAYER ASPIRIN, because BAYER ASPIRIN brings you quick relief from the headachy, feverish feeling—and the muscular aches and pains—that usually accompany a cold.

Ask your doctor about this. We're sure he will tell you that no matter what you do to try stopping or shortening a cold, it's sound advice.

FEEL BETTER FAST

And it's advice that produces fast results. For BAYER ASPIRIN is actually ready to go to work in two seconds. That's why, when you take it to relieve these distressing cold symptoms, you get the relief you want with astonishing speed.

By dropping a BAYER ASPIRIN tablet in a glass of water and watching how quickly it disintegrates, you can see this two second speed with your own eyes.

WHAT TO DO FOR SORE THROAT

BAYER ASPIRIN is also an excellent medication to use for the relief of sore throats due to colds. You just dissolve three BAYER ASPIRIN tablets in one-third of a glass of water—and then gargle. This makes a highly potent medicinal gargle that almost instantly soothes tender throat membranes, relieves pain and irritation.

You'll find that BAYER ASPIRIN is not only highly effective, but wonderfully gentle, too. Its single active ingredient is so gentle to the system doctors regularly prescribe it even for small children.

Get BAYER ASPIRIN today. When you buy, ask for it by its full name—Bayer Aspirin—not just for "aspirin" alone.

Because no other pain reliever can match its record of use by millions of normal people, without ill effect, one thing you can take with complete confidence is genuine

At Sports Afield Club, the gourmet can enjoy rare fish and game from all over the world

IN REFRIGERATOR, Chef Raymond Paret inspects antelope from Africa.

...all you can eat for only $128.01

WE ARE, in the main, an eat-and-run people. We bolt our breakfast and dash off to work still munching our toast. Lunch is usually built around a sandwich, and even dinner is often downed in haste by a generation seemingly always in a hurry to get on with life.

There are some of us, however, who can handle an asparagus fork or a snail clamp with all the flair of the most fastidious of Old World epicures. Among them are the patrons of New York's smart Sports Afield Club, founded recently by a national sporting magazine as a place where sportsmen with the means could dine every so often on the wild game of all nations.

At Sports Afield, the hungry sportsman may enjoy such savory delights as Alaskan caribou steak ($75 a serving), water buffalo saute ($13), roast mountain lion ($60), Mexican armadillo ragout ($100), braised kangaroo ($50), baked baby shark ($15), rattlesnake souffle ($25) and ostrich eggs ($35 apiece), all prepared by Raymond Paret, a French chef in the Escoffier tradition.

IN DINING ROOM, headwaiter Siro Pestuggia ladles white wine, brandy on antelope cut. Waiters wait with sauces.

How well do you really understand him?

IF YOUR CHILD SEEMS FRAIL AND LANGUID HERE'S SOMETHING YOU CAN DO THAT MAY MAKE A WONDERFUL DIFFERENCE

The health of a child is largely in its mother's hands. His welfare depends upon how well she understands his needs. For example, when a child is frail and nervous or languid, one of the commonest causes is faulty nutrition.

Probably he gets plenty of food but not enough of the right kind. A mother should always remember that a child needs, in proportion to body weight, 2 to 3 times as much of certain foods as adults; these food elements such as protein, calcium, iron, Vitamins $B_1$, C, niacin and riboflavin may be called the "spark plugs" of robust health and vitality. A child needs lots of them. A lack of one or more can cause a slump.

Of course, a fully adequate diet can be selected from ordinary foods, but it's difficult to be sure you're right. And so, today, busy, intelligent mothers employ an easier method in approaching this problem. They use a supplementary food like Ovaltine. The purpose of a supplementary food is to fill in the chinks, gaps, loopholes that may occur in ordinary meals; it supplies those rarer elements most easily lost in cooking, most apt to be lacking.

Ovaltine, mixed with milk, contains practically all the vitamins and minerals necessary to bring the ordinary meal up to the full requirements of a growing child. It also provides an extra supplement of high quality proteins. Ovaltine is so processed that even a child with a delicate stomach can digest it readily.

So why don't you join the host of other mothers in this health insurance program. Give 2 to 3 glasses of Ovaltine daily in addition to regular meals. Then you can be sure you have done just about everything you can do to insure proper nutrition for your child.

READ WHAT FOOD-VALUES

Sea-Going Weatherman

For two years Capt. Burton and the George W. Campbell have been fighting wind and sleet in the North Atlantic

By FRANK De BLOIS

AS HE HEADED HER SLOWLY through the choppy seas, the skipper of the French freighter Caen knew that his ship was in trouble—real trouble.

The Caen, a converted Liberty ship, had left Le Havre harbor two weeks earlier, bound for Hampton Roads, Va. Then one night while riding the tail end of a hurricane lashing northward from the Caribbean, she rammed the submerged hull of a drifting derelict. Her plates sprung wide open and water started to rise in her hold. Her radio began to sputter plaintively for help: "SOS . . . SOS . . . SOS . . ."

Her plea was heard. For while the Caen, her engines dead, floundered hopelessly 300 miles east of Delaware Bay, the U. S. Coast Guard Cutter George W. Campbell was chopping through heavy seas to her rescue.

The Campbell, a 2,500-ton weather ship skippered by stocky, straightforward Capt. Watson A. Burton, USCG, was westbound at 14 knots from Weather Station How between Bermuda and the U. S. mainland when her radio picked up the Caen's distress call.

"Change course to Three-Five-Seven," the skipper ordered.

The Campbell Comes Through

Five hours later the Campbell had thrown a hawser over the bow of the French ship. Early the next morning, with the aid of a tug from New York, the cutter towed the distressed freighter past the Delaware Capes.

For the ship's company of the Caen, it had been a case of life or death. But for Capt. Burton and the Campbell the rescue added up to almost the only hours of excitement in a month of routine but exacting patrol.

Since the end of the war, life aboard a Coast Guard weather ship has only rarely been flavored with drama.

NORTH ATLANTIC weather beat includes ten stations manned by seven nations. U.S. has five, shares one with Canada.

En route to patrol area, Coast Guard's Campbell holds rendezvous with rescue plane.

For the most part it consists of days of weary vigil on the cold-choked sealanes of the Atlantic, unrelieved by sight or sound of land. But any day or night can come a sudden call of distress, from a freighter like the Caen, or from a plane like the "Bermuda Sky Queen" rescued by the Campbell's sister Bibb in 1947.

Right now the Campbell, named for a former Secretary of the Treasury, is one of 22 American cutters spotted across the Atlantic in an internationally-operated weather service system. It was originally designed to protect Britain's ferry command in World War II and now stands watch for both air and surface traffic across the North Atlantic.

During the war the ships passed back information on weather and also fought German U-Boats and shot down enemy aircraft.

Today, however, Capt. Burton's ship has three main functions. It provides weather and meteorological information to the U. S. Weather Bureau, gives communications service and guidance to planes flying the Atlantic, and performs search and rescue work.

COAST GUARDSMEN prepare to release balloon to test upper wind currents.

At present five of the ten stations on the weather patrol are manned by U. S. Coast Guard ships and a sixth is covered jointly by the U. S. and Canada. Britain guards two others, the Low Countries man another and the Swedes and Norwegians share the tenth.

The cutters usually stay at sea a month, including two weeks travel to and from their stations. In port, they refuel, replenish stores and give shore leave to their crews of 12 officers and 125 men.

Heavy Weather on the Bridge

Last winter the Campbell made two patrols, one at Station Able in the Denmark Strait, the other at Station Charlie, 1,000 miles east of Newfoundland.

"At Able, we had the usual weather," said Captain Burton. "When you're on the northern stations you can expect rough seas most of the time, especially north of the Grand Banks and east of Greenland.

"Out there, the thermometer frequently drops below freezing and the waves get up to 40 and 50 feet, and before you know it all the deckhouses are sheathed in a couple of feet of ice."

It's a lonely existence. Often the crew may complete a month's patrol without seeing anything but driving rain, pelting spray and lashing waves. Even the sight of a sea gull is rare.

There's Always Acey-Ducey

"We try to keep the crew happy with movies, boxing on the afterdeck and below, smokers, and lots of acey-ducey. Then there's plenty of steak, chicken, french fries and ice cream. We're all coffee drinkers and there is always java in the galley when a man comes off watch."

The day follows a pattern.

"Rise-and-shine" is sounded at 6:30 and the men scour topside and scrub below until mess call at 7:15. The mornings are devoted to maintenance, the afternoons to fire, collision and rescue drill. After 5 o'clock mess, the crew is free until "Lights Out!" is sounded at 10.

Together the Campbell and Burton have patrolled the seas for almost two years.

They shared their closest call in December, 1948, while the Campbell was homeward bound from Weather Station Able.

"I was asleep in my cabin," Burton recalls. "Suddenly I felt the ship lurch as a mountain of water sloshed over her bow and broke against the forward deckhouse.

By the time the skipper reached the bridge, the engines were going again and the Campbell was staggering ahead again despite the fact that the forward deckhouse had been caved in by that murderous wave that broke over the bow.

"For a minute," says Burton, "I thought we'd be ripped apart and go down. But we kept moving slowly through that terrible sea and made it to port. Sometimes — when I look back and recall it — I think maybe we're all living on borrowed time."

Smart new outfits sparkle against a Colombian background

DOWN-TO-EARTH denim did some fancy flying recently when two PARADE models visited Colombia via Avianca Air Line (New York to Bogota, about 15 hours, $213).

Their mission: to test wrinkle-shy Erwin denims in the same summer settings they'll soon be seen against in the U.S. The models, Maurine Zollman and Pud Gadiot, saw orchid gardens, cathedrals, salt mines and bull fights. In turn, fashion-wise Colombians saw inexpensive ($4 to $45) but stunning clothes in many hues.

Cereal Candies!

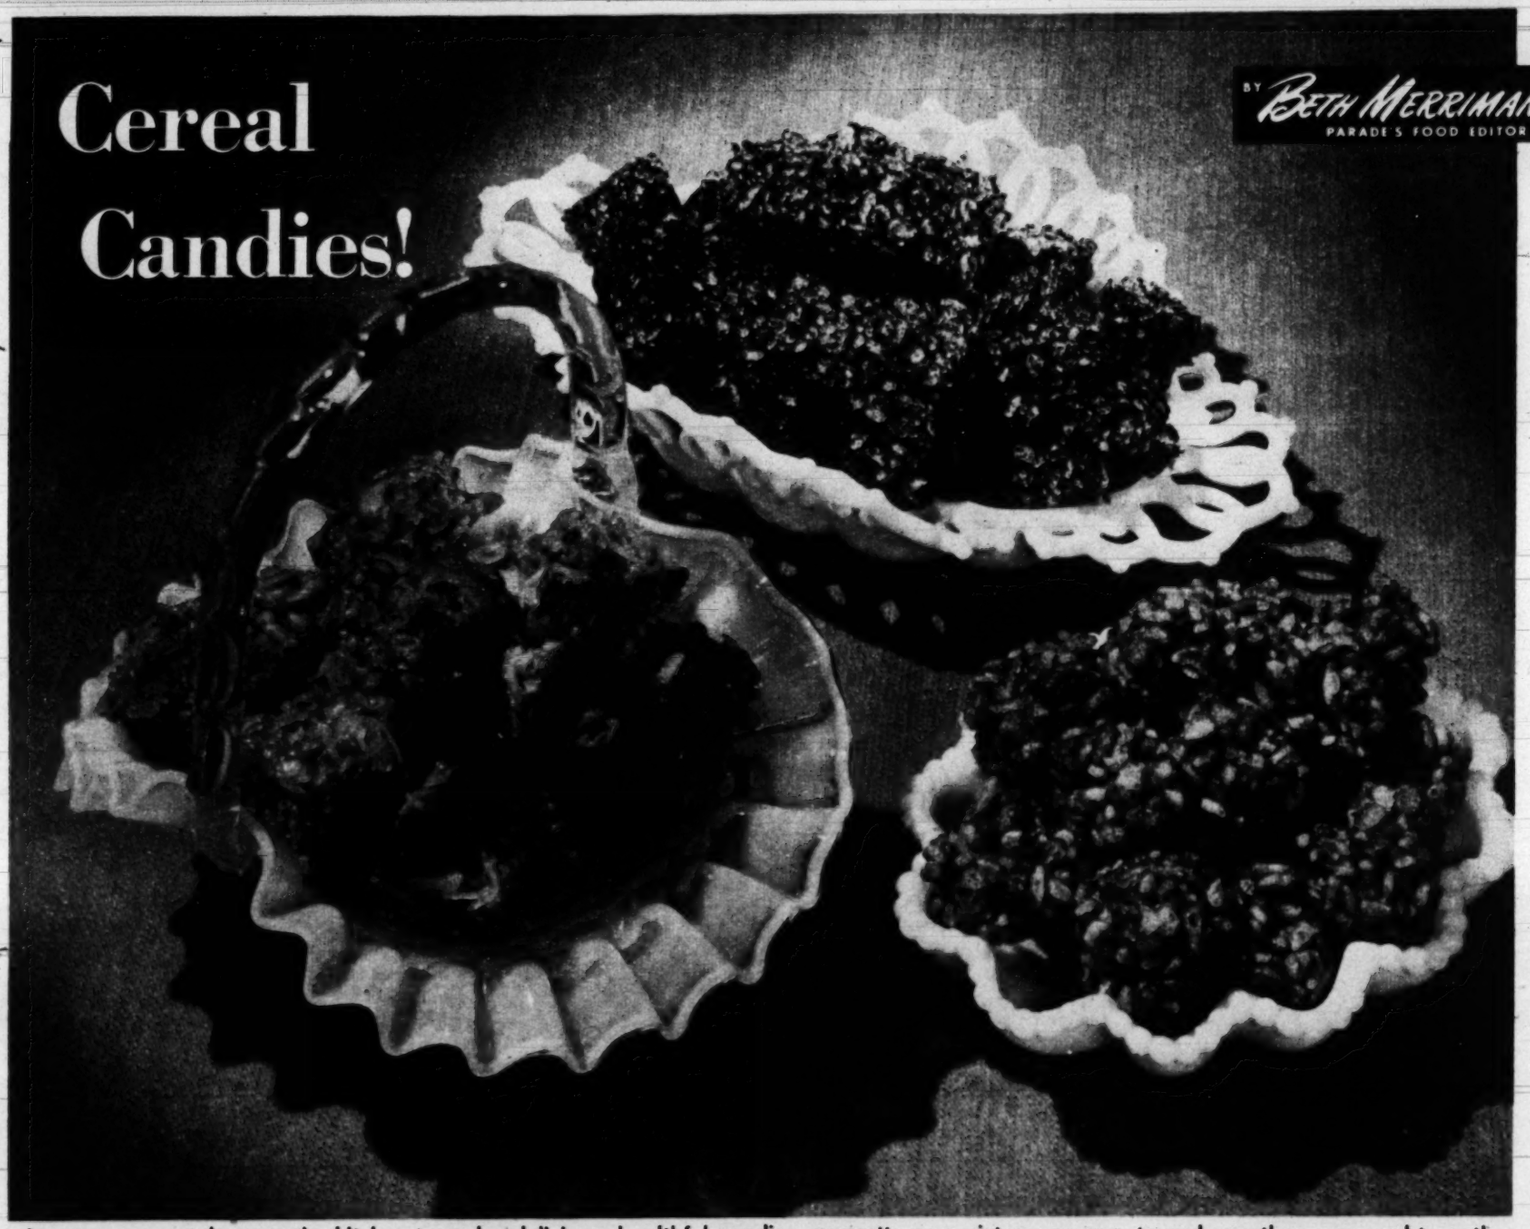
BY BETH MERRIMAN
PARADE'S FOOD EDITOR



Let teen-agers take over the kitchen to make delicious, healthful candies, as pretty as a picture, as easy to make as they are good to eat!

Making them is kitchen fun for everyone . . .

THREE ingredients are all you need to make Sugared Crunch candy.

COMBINE rice cereal, honey, chocolate to make Honey Crisp Bars.

TWO cereals, coconut, peanuts and cream syrup = crisp peanut squares.

MAKE ONE OR MAKE ALL THREE! There's not much work involved and very little washing up to do afterwards. The few ingredients called for in the recipes are usually on hand. The cost is trifling, considering the yield. And, best of all, these candies are packed with food value.

Cereal Candies

SUGARED CRUNCH

Measure 5½ cups crisp rice cereal into buttered bowl. Cook 1½ cups light brown sugar and 3 tablespoons butter or margarine in heavy frying pan, stirring until melted and smooth. Pour at once over cereal, stirring to coat each kernel. Form into small balls.

HONEY CRISP BARS

Melt 2 6-oz. packages semi-sweet chocolate pieces over hot but not boiling water. Add 2/3 cup honey; mix well. Remove from heat. Add 1 5½-oz. package crisp rice cereal; stir until well coated with chocolate. Press into greased shallow, oblong pan. Cool. Cut into bars.

CRISPY PEANUT SQUARES

Combine 1½ cups cornflakes, 1½ cups crisp rice cereal, 1 cup moist, shredded coconut and ½ cup salted peanuts in large mixing bowl. Cook ½ cup cream, ½ cup light corn syrup, and ½ cup sugar together over direct heat to temperature of 240°F. (soft ball in cold water). Pour syrup over other ingredients; mix well. Press mixture into a well-greased 9-inch square pan. Cool. Cut in squares.

Lipton Noodle Soup in 7 minutes— and just like Grandma's!

It's rich, old-fashioned chicken broth—brimming over with old-style noodles . . . tender, and extra nourishing because they're enriched! And good? You'll declare this soup just came out of a kettle, after hours of simmering! But you'll fresh-cook this family favorite in just 7 minutes!

Lipton Tomato-Vegetable Soup has 6 vegetables— tastes like just-from-the-garden!

Ruby-red, plump tomatoes make the stock—and then come the vegetables! Loads of 'em—the kind Grandma carefully chose for her vegetable soup! And noodles, too! Glorious, golden, enriched noodles! What a hearty soup! Takes only minutes to fresh-cook all this glory!

Save money 2 ways*

*Lipton Soups cost less—make more! Almost 1½ times as much as most canned soups —nearly a quart! Serves 4-6. Get Lipton Soup Mixes today—and live better for less!

They Fight Divorce

Divorce detour: Chicago lawyer Samuel Starr (right) refers "curable" applicants to "Divorcees Anonymous."

STARR asks husband to keep temper, try free "D.A." treatment before suing.

"Divorcees Anonymous"

THE PALE, hurt-looking blonde and the dark, angry man she had married wanted a divorce. "The sooner the better," they told Chicago lawyer Samuel Starr. Listening to his wife's accusations, the husband irritably pounded the desk and started for the door.

"Wait," said Starr. "Before we go ahead, I want you to try something. It won't cost you a cent. It may save your marriage."

Picking up his phone, Starr made a brief call, saying "I think I have something you folks can handle."

tackles a major social problem . . .

With that, Chicago's volunteer divorce-prevention organization "Divorcees Anonymous" went smoothly into gear. Conceived by Starr himself after 15 years of handling divorce cases convinced him that most divorces are unnecessary, "D.A." works along the lines of "Alcoholics Anonymous." If "cured" drinkers can help alcoholics, the reasoning goes, regretful divorcees can help couples headed for the marital rocks.

The D.A.s Pay a Visit

A few days after the meeting in Starr's office, six "D.A." volunteers, selected because their own marriages had been wrecked for similar reasons, called on the couple.

"Look," they said, "Lots of couples are unhappy. Most couples try to get over it. We didn't. We got our divorces. Divorce can be unhappy, too. Let's find what ails you."

After hours of talk, the "D.A.'s" discovered familiar "in-law trouble." A "D.A." went to the in-laws. Bit by bit, the difficulty was brought out into the light. Marriage, with the trouble adjusted, was better than divorce. A few weeks later, the couple went away for a new marital try – together.

Can "D.A." Solve Divorce?

"D.A.," like "A.A.," may not be effective in all cases (some are too far advanced or the basic trouble is too deep) but in a recent ten-week period, "D.A." made a record of 33 "preventions" out of 39 threatened divorces.

If its score holds, "D.A." may become our most important instrument in leavening the yearly average of 600,000 divorces and preventing the disruption of the lives of 150,000 children. The Chicago organization has grown to 100 marital trouble-shooters. Groups in over 50 cities have asked about setting up "D.A.'s." Says Starr: "It's tough for lawyers. It's worth it."

D.A." VOLUNTEERS visit wife, tell her of loneliness of divorce, get her cooperation. Similar group visited husband and in-laws. Result: Another marriage is saved.

What you should know about tooth decay

There are many possible causes of tooth decay – and just as many theories about preventing it. Almost all dental authorities agree that there is no such thing as a single preventive.

Most of the present theories about causes of tooth decay can be grouped generally as follows:

(1) Bacterial theory.
(2) Nutritional theory.
(3) Functional theory.

Obviously no dentifrice can overcome possible nutritional and functional causes which may be the most important and which have to do with such factors as improper diet, especially in the early years of life, and with improper functioning of the bodily organs.

Dentifrice manufacturers and pharmaceutical institutions like Squibb have made available products which attack cause number 1, the bacterial theory.

Squibb uses a magnesium hydrate base in dentifrices to help neutralize mouth acids in which harmful bacteria thrive. Some use ammoniated substances to combat these bacteria. There is no conclusive proof that one method is more effective than the other.

Almost without exception, however, dentists recommend brushing teeth regularly with some form of dentifrice after every meal. For even though all do not feel that a dentifrice can help prevent decay, they know that dentifrices have other important functions . . . to improve the appearance of your teeth . . . to clean away food particles . . . to freshen your taste and breath. Squibb, for example, contains real mint as a refresher. It also contains the finest, safest polishing ingredient known. Purity and safety, of course, are of utmost importance. If swallowed, Squibb Dental Cream has a gentle antacid effect.

Remember . . . a good, reliable dentifrice may combat only one of the several possible causes of tooth decay. Seeing your dentist regularly for a complete check-up is still the best way to save yourself needless trouble, pain and expense.

Detective Bellamy

How a Broadway star trained for his role as a sleuth

Actor Bellamy

CONVERSATION CEASED as the two New York detectives and a companion, cruising in their sedan, heard the pulse-quickening Signal 30 spout from their short-wave radio.

"Proceed with caution, to area 1-2-7 Street and Lenox. Muggers. That is all."

The three men, grim and tense, sped toward the trouble spot. They knew what Signal 30 meant: that their quarry was armed.

Harlem is ominously silent at three on a chilly winter morning and there was no sign of life as the car slid silently to a stop.

"I'll take the front, Al," the first detective whispered to his partner. "You take the rear–and you, Mister – just keep your eye on the basement."

The man called "Mister" obeyed the order, silently praying the hoodlums would pick another route. For his only weapon was a rolled-up script for "Detective Story," the Broadway hit of which he happened to be the star – for he was Ralph Bellamy, screen and stage star, on the trail of local color.

IN PLAY, Bellamy has role of tough detective faced with wrong-doing in his own family.

Minutes passed, and Bellamy kept his quiet station in the muggy darkness between buildings. Then he heard a sharp cry, a scuffle, and a moment later saw his two companions coming toward him. Between them, limply swaying, stood the slim form of a young sailor. "O.K., that's him," said the senior detective as they approached the prowl car. "Radio headquarters."

For Bellamy, it was another lesson in police realism which he studied for ten weeks in order to bring the right ring of sincerity to his stage portrayal of Jim McLeod, the slick dick of "Detective Story." The show has been one of the hits of this year's season on Broadway.

Like the play's author, Sidney Kingsley, the actor wanted to know and understand detectives–the flesh and blood gentry, not the cigar-chewing, derbied flatfoots of the movies.

Some Nights Are Quiet

Not all of his experiences were as goose-pimply as that pre-dawn Signal 30 episode. There were dull nights he shared with Capt. Jim Diamond in New York's once-exciting Chinatown; quiet sessions chewing the fat with Lt. Ray Martin and Detective Jim Leach of the West 47th Street precinct, and amusing incidents cropping out of chats with detectives Danny Scanniell, Morris Hochman, Neill Carroll and Jim Burke of the busy 30th Precinct.

There was the night Lt. Martin arrested a mug for disorderly conduct, and as he was escorting the man to the station house a cop from another beat handed him a parking ticket.

On another occasion, when a gang largely made up of Latins was caught robbing a dress factory, Bellamy alone could question them, thanks to his high school Spanish–knowledge the 45-year-old actor picked up attending Newbrier High in Wilmette, Ill.

Are Detectives Really Tough?

"Actually, it's quite wrong to think of a detective as heartless," Ralph says. "In their own way, they're both generous and sympathetic. Once they clamp the bracelets on a prisoner they begin to feel sorry for him. They're really gentle guys, unless you cross 'em up–then look out, brother!"

Bellamy, during his entire detective training course was never recognized as a Hollywood or Broadway celebrity–except by the cops. Recently, he told me, he was passing 39th Street and Lexington Avenue when he noticed a crowd milling about a hit-and-run casualty who lay beside the curb.

A cop spotted him and shouted, "Hey, Bellamy – go in and phone for an ambulance." Automatically the actor did as instructed and when he returned to the scene the cop grabbed his arm, refunded him the nickel for the phone call and apologized: "Gosh, Mr. Bellamy," he said, sheepishly, "for a minute there I forgot you weren't really in the service!"

. . . Hot Rock

What was that noise? Hotel man Tillotson found out next morning

SURFACE of stone is studied by a museum expert.

AT 2:44 A.M. one day recently, W. P. Tillotson, manager of the Prince Llewellyn hotel in Beddgelert, Wales, sat bolt upright in bed.

He had been jolted out of a sound sleep by a series of explosions. Sounded like a naval broadside, he said. Outside, the sky was clear, with no sign of a storm. The noise couldn't have been thunder, and the ships of the Royal Navy were far away. Mr. Tillotson listened a while, yawned, then went back to sleep.

Next morning, Mrs. Tillotson opened the door of the upstairs lounge of the hotel—a room directly under the roof.

The lounge was white with plaster dust. In the ceiling was a jagged hole. On the floor was a chunk of dark stone about the size of a large fist.

Celestial Cannon-Ball

Checking on the damage, Tillotson found that the stone had crashed through the slate roof, a full five-eighths of an inch thick, had pierced the lath underneath, dented an iron girder and finally ripped through the plaster ceiling.

Analyzed later, the stone was found to be a meteorite. It weighs about 1½ pounds and is composed of black chondritic stone with an alloy of iron and nickel.

Meteors like Mr. Tillotson's apparently are fragments of shattered planets or other celestial bodies that follow regular orbits in outer space. Attraction of the sun or other stellar bodies may cause a fragment to break out of its orbit. The earth may cross the meteor's path (or vice versa), and when it does a collision results.

Friction of the earth's atmosphere heats the meteor to super white-heat. Most meteors explode about 40 miles up.

If the core of the meteor remains intact, it hurtles earthward until the thickness of the earth's atmosphere sharply brakes its speed. Meteorites smack into the earth at velocities ranging between eight and 44 miles per second. A meteor becomes a meteorite when it hits the earth.

The Beddgelert meteorite is the twelfth to be found in England. About 1,400 have been counted throughout the world.

Last one to hit the U.S. scared the daylights out of farmers near Norton, Kans., on Feb. 11, 1948. It exploded 35 miles above the earth, and a 2,000-pound chunk buried itself 11 feet deep in a wheat field.

MOVIE ANIMAL MAN

Expert trainer Curley Twiford shows animal kingdom who's boss

By KARL KOHRS AND SID ROSS

REHEARSING in "Palomino" (Columbia) for attack on horse (below), Curley Twiford's eagle "Major" flaps off rock. Trainer caught him two miles away.

SQUAWKING in Twiford's arms, eagle relaxes between the scenes.

RETAKE: Twiford perches eagle on rock again as film "victim" stands by.

HOLLYWOOD'S Henry W. "Curley" Twiford has been living with animals for so long that – to some of his friends – he is beginning to look like one. With his muscular frame and bristling mane of yellow hair, he resembles a rather amiable lion.

That is fine with Curley. After 35 years of training animals to act in movies, he has an abiding respect for the four-footed and the feathered.

"You can't fly off the handle with animals," says Curley. "Once they understand what you want, they don't have to be forced. They're anxious to please, but they get stage fright just as people do. So I just talk things over with them quietly, and then everything's okay."

Back-Yard Zoo

Curley's menagerie of some 400 owls, mountain lions, ravens, turtles, alligators, eagles and hawks–all living happily in the back yard of his North Hollywood home – includes a number of well-known public characters.

There is "Jimmy the Raven," a gimlet-eyed smoothie who has appeared in more than 1,000 pictures and even been honored with screen credits.

"Cougar," a sleek, six-year-old mountain lion has also done some mighty impressive snarling in 150 outdoor films.

Two other important Twiford stars are "Admiral" and "Major," a pair of American eagles. Admiral, who has flapped around for 50 years, poses for closeups. Major does most of the flying, although Admiral first became famous 35 years ago, when he flew with a live baby in his claws for a hair-raising film spectacle.

Twiford has trained the eagle to talk –or, more exactly, to respond to commands by opening and closing his beak. And with painstaking training, Twiford has taught "lip movement" to other animals – including a couple of stage-struck turtles.

Curley began his career with Jimmy the Raven, a pair of parakeets and a bulldog. One day, a movie director saw the bulldog trotting along carrying a stick with a parakeet perched at either end. Jimmy was on the dog's back, bossing the act. It wasn't long before all four were signed up for the movies.

Curley's career is not without its scars. He's been bitten, clawed, scratched and pecked. In most cases, he says, it wasn't the animal's fault.

There was the time on location, for example, when Curley, lugging his mountain lion, climbed into the cab of

"COUGAR," a mountain lion being trained not to attack children, lunges at doll held by Mrs. Twiford. Next step: Cat grabs liniment-soaked doll, drops it fast.

PALS: Eagle, hawk, legendary foes, sit on Twiford's arms. Eagle sounds off.

JIMMY the Raven turns pages of magazine, can also deal hand of poker.

a truck. The door accidentally slammed on the big cat's tail. In a frenzy the animal raked Curley with her claws. The driver dove out of the window.

"I wrenched open the door," Curley recalls, "and the cat quieted down. Then she began licking the blood on my wounds. She was sorry, and wanted to make up."

While filming the eagle carrying off the baby, Curley and a camera crew were over the ocean in a blimp. The eagle—equipped for this part of the sequence with a dummy baby—was tied to the blimp with 1,000 feet of piano wire. This fouled in the propeller of one engine. Then the other engine conked out and the blimp began to settle.

Curley climbed out on a strut, untangled the wire and pulled in the eagle. Then, clutching a pair of pliers, he crawled out to the other engine and got it started. Since that day, Curley has refused to fly. Too dangerous, he says.

The Seagulls Sank

But there have been lighter moments in Curley's career. He still chuckles about the 700 seagulls. A movie director wanted them swimming. Curley, who knew the birds would get water-logged if they were weighted and kept in the water too long, warned the director not to put them in until he was ready to shoot.

The director ignored the warning. Into the lake plopped the gulls. But when the cameras finally were ready, the director took one look in horror.

Bobbing in the lake were 700 heads. Curley had to fish the gulls out and dry them in the sun.

What, No Battle?

Only once has the animal kingdom let Curley down. That was when he tried to stage a battle between a cobra and a mongoose. The cobra reared out of its basket, cocked an eye at the mongoose, then went back to sleep. The mongoose glided over to the cobra, sniffed it, then curled up next to the snake.

"Guess nobody told them they were enemies," says Curley. In 35 years Curley has trained more than 1,000 animals, birds and reptiles. Hardest to train, he says, are cats; easiest are crows and ravens, which remember a stunt for ten years.

Curley admits he's in a dangerous business, but what worries him most are the actors in the scenes with his animals.

"You got to show those animals it's no use taking a bite out of a star," he says rather disconsolately. "Trouble is, how do you tell 'em?"

KEN-L-RATION

BALANCE stunt with trainer Ralph Smith is model Nancy Russack's recipe for poise.

Acrobatic Cure

. . . Ralph Smith's special exercises bring strength to a polio victim

DIFFICULT back bend aloft strengthens Nancy's stomach muscles, tones arms, legs.

THE SIGHT of a pretty girl and a husky swimmer doing acrobatics on the beach is nothing unusual.

But when the girl is 19-year-old model Nancy Russack and the man is Ralph Smith, of Miami Beach's Town and Beach Club, the scene has special meaning.

Why? Because "Smitty's" special aerial exercises helped restore Nancy's health after a polio attack. The jumps, leaps, flips and poses Smith teaches 1,000 handicapped adults and youngsters annually, let her do what all polio sufferers hope for: to move freely, without aids or discomfort.

GYMNAST Smith advocates exercise in mid-air to build up sense of full muscle control.

NANCY, ex-polio victim, tries stand-on-head trick in which the limbs are straight.

SUNBATHERS at Miami Beach goggle regularly at Smith hoisting his students skyward.

PROOF that gymnastics do good: 94-pound Nancy holds 202-pound Smith aloft.

READER'S DIGEST TELLS WHAT LAXATIVES ARE BEST FOR YOU!

Here's how a "lazy colon" can be regulated without pills, salts or drugs

Reader's Digest has dared print the truth about laxatives. It tells about the dangers of cathartics that upset your digestive system. Learn why—especially after 35—it's so important to safeguard your health.

Serutan is the wonderfully effective way to promote waste elimination. It has a mild laxative action like certain fruits and vegetables. No chemical drugs—no salts—no oils. Serutan gives a gentle "push", completely different in action from purgatives.

If you're over 35, read the October Reader's Digest then get a package of Serutan with confidence. What a marvelous feeling when you're regular again! Money back guarantee.

NEW! For more sluggish constipation, try new concentrated powder Serutan. Faster acting! Wonderfully effective!

PIXIE PUZZLE ADVENTURES

by Matt Curzon

Copyright, 1950, New York Herald Tribune Inc.

1 AS THE PIXIES ENTER THE MYSTERIOUS LAND, THEY SEE A LARGE ANIMAL RACING TOWARD THEM. THE ONLY PLACE OF SAFETY IS THE TOP OF A NEARBY POLE. THEY CHOOSE A PATH AND RUN FOR THE POLE, EXERCISING GREAT CARE, FOR ALL THE PATHS BUT ONE LEAD TO HOLES! TO GET TO THE POLE YOU MUST TAKE 25 STEPS. EACH BLACK BOX IS A STEP AND YOU MUST PASS TWO WHITE BOXES TO EACH STEP. DO NOT GO DIAGONALLY. START AT THE X AND SEE IF YOU CAN REACH THE POLE IN 25 STEPS.

2 THE PIXIES CLIMB QUICKLY UP THE POLE.

"LOOK!" SHOUTS FEE FEE, "HE'S STILL AFTER US!"

"DON'T FRET," CHAMPIE TELLS HER, "I KNOW HOW TO HANDLE HIM."

DO YOU WANT TO SEE THE ANIMAL WHO IS CAUSING ALL THE EXCITEMENT AMONG THE PIXIES?

BLACK IN ALL THE SPACES THAT CONTAIN LETTERS THAT COME BEFORE K IN THE ALPHABET, AND SHADE THE SPACES THAT HAVE LETTERS THAT COME AFTER R IN THE ALPHABET. (YOUR SHADING SHOULD LOOK LIKE THIS ////.

3 THE ANIMAL SURPRISES THE PIXIES! INSTEAD OF TRYING TO ATTACK THEM, HE GETS DOWN ON HIS KNEES, AND CRIES, "DON'T BE AFRAID OF ME. I WON'T HURT YOU. I JUST WANT SOMETHING THAT IS PLENTIFUL WHERE YOU COME FROM. IF YOU WILL JUST GIVE ME A _____ I WILL GO ON MY WAY."

THE ANIMAL GULPS HARD WHEN HE TRIES TO SAY WHAT HE WANTS .. AND HERE IS HOW WE CAN FIND OUT WHAT HE WANTS. PICK OUT THE LETTER INVOLVED IN EACH LINE, AND YOU WILL HAVE THE MISSING WORD.

4 THE PIXIES GIVE THE ANIMAL WHAT HE WANTS, AND HE GOES ON HIS WAY. THE PIXIES HEAVE A SIGH OF RELIEF. THEY ARE SAFE AT LAST.

WIZZIE LAUGHS AS HE SEES ALL THE PIXIES CLINGING TO THE POLE. HE KNOWS THAT IN THIS POSITION HE CAN GIVE EACH PIXIE A NUMBER (FROM 1 TO 9) SO THAT EACH ROW (HORIZONTALLY AND VERTICALLY) WILL ADD UP TO 23.

HOW WOULD YOU ARRANGE THE 9 NUMBERS?

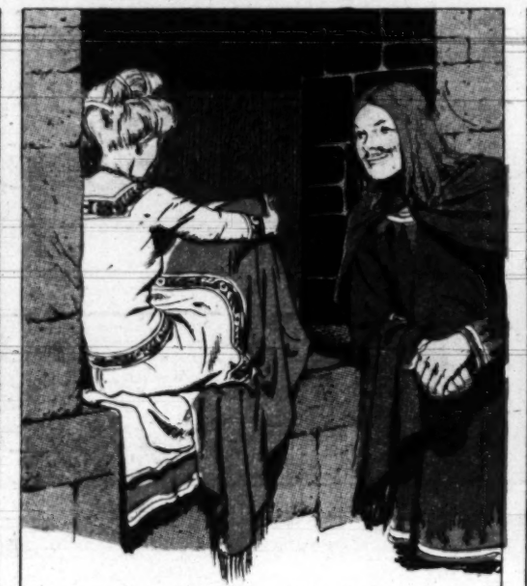
IN THE DAYS OF KING ARTHUR

BY HAROLD R FOSTER

Synopsis: WINTER COMES TO THE LAND OF THULE, WHITE, CLEAN AND SILENT. THE NORTH STAR BLAZES OVERHEAD AND THE SUN APPEARS LOW OVER THE SOUTHERN HILLS. BUT THE KING IS HAPPY. HIS ONLY SON, PRINCE VALIANT, IS HOME. HIS GRANDSON IS HEALTHY, LOUD AND LOVABLE, WHILE HIS DAUGHTER-IN-LAW, ALETA, LAUGHS AT HIM, BULLIES HIM, RUNS HIS HOUSEHOLD, IS IMPUDENT AND ADORABLE. HE IS CONTENT.

THE WINTER DAYS SPEED BY, JOYOUS, CARE-FREE DAYS, AND THE LINES THAT CARE HAD ETCHED IN THE KING'S FACE DISAPPEAR. BUT FIVE MONTHS HAVE PASSED SINCE VAL WAS SO TERRIBLY WOUNDED AND HIS LEFT SIDE IS STILL WEAK AND STIFF AND HE IS WORRIED.

THERE IS NO ROOM FOR WORRY AT THE PALACE SINCE ALETA TOOK OVER. THE OLD WALLS ECHO WITH THE LAUGHTER OF YOUNG VOICES AND DANCING FEET. ALETA WAS NEVER SO HAPPY.



THERE IS ALWAYS THAT ONE PERSON WHO THINKS SPARKLING EYES AND LAUGHING LIPS ARE AN INVITATION ESPECIALLY FOR HIM.

"UNDOUBTEDLY THE LADY ALETA IS IN LOVE WITH ME," THINKS THIS HANDSOME YOUNG PRINCELING, "BUT I'LL BE GENEROUS AND GIVE HER SOME KISSES AND A SQUEEZE, PERHAPS."

SO HE FOLLOWS HER INTO THE CORRIDOR, SLIPS AN ARM AROUND HER SLIM WAIST AND DRAWS HER TO HIM.....

.....BUT HE DOES NOT KISS HER. INSTEAD HE RELEASES HER AND STEPS BACK. SHE HAS NOT STRUGGLED. OR SPOKEN. MERELY LOOKED COLDLY AT HIM. HE HAS STEPPED OUT OF HIS CLASS!
